DURING THE MIDDLE AGES.

PUBLISHED BY THE AUTHORITY OF HER MAJESTY'S TREASURY, UNDER THE DIRECTION OF THE MASTER OF THE ROLLS.

On the 26th of January 1857, the Master of the Rolls submitted to the Treasury a proposal for the publication of materials for the History of this Country from the Invasion of the Romans to the reign of Henry VIII.

The Master of the Rolls suggested that these materials should be selected for publication under competent editors without reference to periodical or chronological arrangement, without mutilation or abridgment, preference being given, in the first instance, to such materials as were most scarce and valuable.

He proposed that each chronicle or historical document to be edited should be treated in the same way as if the editor were engaged on an Editio Princeps; and for this purpose the most correct text should be formed from an accurate collation of the best MSS.

To render the work more generally useful, the Master of the Rolls suggested that the editor should give an account of the MSS. employed by him, of their age and their peculiarities; that he should add to the work a brief account of the life and times of the author, and any remarks necessary to explain the chronology; but no other note or comment was to be allowed, except what might be necessary to establish the correctness of the text.

The works to be published in octavo, separately, as they were finished; the whole responsibility of the task resting upon the editors, who were to be chosen by the Master of the Rolls with the sanction of the Treasury.

The Lords of Her Majesty's Treasury, after a careful consideration of the subject, expressed their opinion in a Treasury Minute, dated February 9, 1857, that the plan recommended by the Master of the Rolls "was well calculated for the accomplishment of this important national object, in an effectual and satisfactory manner, within a reasonable time, and provided proper attention be paid to economy, in making the detailed arrangements, without unnecessary expense."

They expressed their approbation of the proposal that each Chronicle and historical document should be edited in such a manner as to represent with all possible correctness the text of each writer, derived from a collation of the best MSS., and that no notes should be added, except such as were illustrative of the various readings. They suggested, however, that the preface to each work should contain, in addition to the particulars proposed by the Master of the Rolls, a biographical account of the author, so far as authentic materials existed for that purpose, and an estimate of his historical credibility and value.

INTRODUCTION.

INTRODUCTION.

In the present volume Higden, coming down more nearly to his own times, devotes, as we should expect, a much larger space to the affairs of his own country. The history commences with the close of the first quarter of the seventh century, and terminates in the reign of King Edgar, when Dunstan was archbishop of Canterbury, thus embracing a space of about three hundred and thirty years. It seems most convenient to notice the contents of each chapter in the order in which they come. Contents of the present volume.

The first, which is the xiiith chapter of Higden's fifth book, opens with a notice of the mission of St. Birinus to preach to the Angles. His conversion of Cynegils[1] king of Wessex, and the erection of Dorchester, near Oxford, into an episcopal see, of which Birinus was made bishop, are recorded; as is also a miracle of walking on the sea performed by the saint on his landing. He had left some small matters on shipboard,[2] and not wishing to lose them, marched over the water to fetch them. Birinus was buried at Dorchester, but his body was afterwards removed to Winchester, though the canons of Dorchester denied this. The chronicle gives an anticipatory mention of the episcopal see of Dorchester Lib. v. Cap. XIII. Of St. Birinus, first bishop of Dorchester.

[1] The name is generally written in the MSS. Kyngilsus.

[2] The rescellæ of the MSS. have been too much for the translators. Trevisa puts rescellis or restelles, and the Harleian version shirks the difficulty, and has "certeyne "things of his." The word has various forms, recula, recella, reicula, rescula, resella, and rescella, and is merely a diminutive of res. See Du Cange, s. v. recula, who explains it as res parva seu parvi momenti, and it is employed to translate the Greek πραγμάτιον.

being transferred to Lincoln at the time of the Norman Conquest. Bede and William of Malmesbury are the chief authorities for all that is recorded concerning both ecclesiastical and civil history in England.

East Anglia becomes Christian.

In the notice of the East Anglian kingdom, which immediately follows, mention is made of the Christianization of that kingdom in the reign of Sigebert by a Burgundian bishop, Felix. This prelate had been a friend of Sigebert in his exile, and according to Bede applied to the archbishop Honorius for permission to become a preacher to the Angles. He was, like Birinus, created a bishop in Britain, and his see placed at Donmic.[1] Sigebert introduced into his kingdom some of the educational advantages which he had observed during his exile in Gaul, and after some time became a monk, but was induced to leave his monastic seclusion to aid in repelling the invasion of Penda, in which attempt he fell. The next king of East Anglia, Anna son of Æne, also fell in battle against Penda, against whose incursions the East Anglians were powerless to protect[2] themselves.

Visions of St. Furseus.

The story of St. Furseus is briefly told, as having occurred in the reign of King Sigebert. The whole account of his visions is to be found in Bede, Eccl. Hist. iii. 19, and their character made this saint for a long time a great authority with the advocates of the doctrine of purgatory. The name of the place at which he founded a monastery, given in the text as Cunbrisburgh with variations of orthography as recorded in the notes, and [1] This place, according to Bede's orthography, Domnoc, is Dunwich, on the coast of Suffolk. The episcopal see of Dunwich, of which Felix was bishop for seventeen years, was afterwards translated to Thetford, and then to Norwich. The date of the foundation of the see is A.D. 630. See Godwin de Præsul. 423.

[2] The vast rampart defended by a ditch which bore the name of Reckendyke, though afterwards variously known as St. Edmund's dyke, the Devil's, and lastly, as Cnut's dyke, was made for the purpose of protecting the East Anglians from these and such like incursions of their neighbours. See Lappenberg, i. 242.

written in Bede as Cnobheresburg, is identified with Burghcastle in Suffolk.[1] This visionary monk is said at length to have departed from England on account of the inroads of the heathen population into the Christian portion of the country, and to have died at Peronne in Gaul.

Papal history, pope Severinus.

The history of the Papacy in this volume commences with the mention of the pontificate of Severinus, A.D. 639, and after him of John IV., in the same year, but no event is mentioned except the conversion[2] of the Jews in the time of the latter pope.

The Roman Empire.

The account of the Roman Emperors begins with Heraclius (610–641), but the notice of that prince is very brief, his victories[3] are just mentioned, and his heresy, which is called the heresy of the Jacobites.

Cap. XIV. Of Mahomet and the Saracens.

The next chapter is occupied with an account of Mahomet and the Saracens, who at this time were making great inroads on the Christian world. Higden tells us that he is greatly assisted in his compilation of the history by the works of Stephen of Canterbury and Giraldus Cambrensis. He relates how it was through the intestine discords of Europe that the Saracens were enabled to make good their footing in Spain. It was when Boniface V.[4] was pope (617–626), and Heraclius was emperor, that Mahomet's influence began to wax strong. The story is told how Mahomet was aided in his imposture by a Christian monk,[1] and certain absurd traditional tales are repeated of the way in which public attention was drawn to the rising prophet. Even Higden notes the untrustworthy nature of such materials, calling them in a rubric quæ vulgariter traduntur, and distinguishing them from quod magis communiter approbatur.[2] The monk Sergius is said to have been the victim of a disappointed ambition, and on that account to have have leagued himself with Mahomet.

[2] Platina has no mention of this conversion, though he gives many incidents of this brief pontificate. See fol. 43 b. and 44 a.

[3] The wars of Heraclius were against Cosrhoes II. king of Persia, by whom he was defeated at first, and asked to deny the Christian faith, but being afterwards victorious over the Persian monarch and his successor, he was able to recover the reputed cross of Christ. The erroneous doctrinal opinions of this emperor were those of the Monothelites. The Jacobites mentioned in the text were Monophysites, with whom it is said that Cyrus, when made patriarch of Alexandria, formed a union, and in this way the two sets of opinions became confounded. See Moreri, s. v. Monothelites.

More authentic notices of Mahomet.

We are told how the prophet, fatherless and motherless, lived while a boy under his uncle's protection; of his travels and communications with both Jews and Christians, of his marriage with Chadijah,[3] and of the greater influence which he acquired through this union. He allowed circumcision,[4] and forbade the use of swine's flesh to his followers, in imitation of Judaism. And he imitated Christian baptism in the frequent ablutions which he enjoined on his followers. His regulations with regard to wives and concubines are noticed, and the strict injunctions he laid down in reference to sobriety. The tribute of recognition given by Mahomet to the pro-

[1] This monk, who is called Sergius by Christian writers, and Boheira by the Mohammedans, is said to have been met with by Mahomet in a visit to Syria. The story in the biographies of Mahomet differs somewhat from that in the text, and perhaps may be summarized from a note of Mr. Muir's Life of Mahomet (vol. i. p. 35). Mahomet with the rest of his caravan alighted close to the hermitage or monastery occupied by Boheira. The monk perceived by a cloud which hovered over the company, by the boughs bending to shelter one of them, and by other marvellous tokens, that the party contained the prophet shortly about to arise. He entertained them, but on their assembling he perceived that the object of his search was not among them. At his request they summoned Mahomet, and Boheira questioned him, examined his body to discover the seal of prophecy, and found it plainly impressed upon his back. He then referred to his sacred books, found all the marks to correspond, and declared the boy to be the expected apostle. See also Rodwell's Koran, preface, p. xvi.

phetic character of Moses, John the Baptist, and Christ is mentioned.[1] Higden knows that the Koran represents Christ as taken up to heaven, and not put to death, but adds to the story really given there the legend that Judas Iscariot was changed into the form of Jesus and crucified in his stead. He tells of Abraham's visit to Mecca[2] to build the House of Prayer, in much the same manner as it is spoken of in the Koran. The Mahomedan paradise is described, and the books mentioned which Mahomet admitted to have been divinely inspired. Then follows an absurd account of how Mahomet is said to have brought the Koran into notice as a book sent down from heaven, and the great Mahomedan fast is said to be observed on account of this occurrence. The mode of observance of this fast is given very much as in the text of the Koran.[3] A reason is given why Mahomet pretended to have communications with the archangel Michael, and mention is made of the spread of the faith of Mahomet after his death. This is followed by two stories, one given on the authority of archbishop Turpin, of a marvellous statue of Mahomet on the shores of Spain, and another, without authority, of the treatment accorded by Saladin to two Cistercian monks, and how he essayed to prove that the rule of Mahomet was better than the rule of St. Benedict, which provokes an outburst from Higden against Saladin.

Precepts, &c. of the Koran.

In Chapter xv. Higden notices first the succession of Heraclonas[4] after his father Heraclius. His reign is in the text stated to have been two years. Other authorities say that it lasted but for six months. Mention is made of the banishment of him and of his mother, together with the mutilation of the latter. Higden omits to mention the mutilation of the son which also took place.[1] Theodorus the next pope is said to have held the papal throne for six[2] years. The only particular mentioned under his time is a list of the works of Isidore[3] bishop of Seville, who lived during his papacy.

Cap. xv. Heraclonas emperor.

[1] The passages alluded to are all in the Koran, Sura xix; on Moses (Rodwell), p. 114; on John the Baptist, p. 111; and on Jesus, p. 112.

Pope Theodore I.

Returning to the affairs of Britain, mention is made of the death of Edbald king of Kent, who was succeeded by his son Ercombert. His ecclesiastical regulations are spoken of with praise, and so is his total destruction of idols. In the account of his daughter Erkengoda, and her maternal aunt Ethelburga, instances are given of the fondness of English princes at this period for attaching themselves to continental monasteries, and in some cases inaugurating new foundations. Brie, Chelles, and Andeli[4] are mentioned as favourite places for such retirement.

British history: Ercombert king of Kent.

Resuming (from Paulus Diaconus, who is his great authority for this subject) the history of the Roman emperors, Higden tells of the reign of Constantine the third, but only that he was misled by the patriarch Paulus, as his grandfather had been by Sergius, and drove pope Martin[5] into exile to Pontus. But in the next clause (p. 54), he mixes up the history and fate of Constans II. (who succeeded Constantine III., but whom our author never notices) with the life of his father Constantine III.[1] It was Constans who came and spoiled Rome, and who was murdered in his bath at Syracuse, A.D. 668.

The emperor Constans II. not named by Higden.

The historian now returns to the affairs of Britain, and tells of the death of Cynegils, king of the West Saxons, and the succession of Kenwalcus his son, who though at first professing Christianity as his father had done, not only refused to be baptised, but strove to bring about in Wessex a relapse into paganism similar to that which had taken place in other states, yet his expulsion, and conversion which followed soon after through converse with Anna the pious king of the East Angles, and his steady adherence to the Christian faith after his restoration, prove that his conviction was sincerely shared by his people. An elder son of Cynegils (or according to William of Malmesbury, a brother), named Quichelinus, had died before his father. Certain appointments of bishops made by Kenwalcus are mentioned, as also his wars[2] against the British, and his successful campaign against Wulferus, the son of Penda, who had become king of Mercia on the death of his father.

According to the Saxon Chronicle, in the year 642, according to other authorities in 639, Oswald king of Northumberland was defeated and slain at Mazerfeld[2] by Penda. The cruel treatment to which that king sub-

[1] See also pp. 108, 110, 112, where the circumstance of the death of the emperor by murder while in his bath is again related as having befallen Constantine, and on p. 114 Constantine IV. is named as the next emperor.

[2] The names of the two battle fields are given in Willelmus, one as "locus qui dicitur Witgeornes- " brug," and the other "juxta mon- " tem qui dicitur Pene."

jected the dead body of Oswald proves the fierceness of his nature and the dread in which Oswald had been held. The head and arms of the dead king were set on poles. These limbs were removed and buried in the following year by Oswy, the brother and successor of Oswald. His body was buried at Bardeney in Lindsey, through the care of his niece Ostrida. Some years afterwards it is said to have been moved to Gloucester by Elfleda queen of Mercia. A story is narrated that an arm of St. Oswald was at Peterborough, but of this Higden declares himself incredulous.

Cruel treatment of his body.

Story of Cesara, wife of the king of Persia.

A story follows of Cesara, the wife of a king of Persia who, on becoming a Christian, came to Constantinople, was baptized, and refused to return to her husband unless he would accept the same faith which she had embraced. Learning this the king came to Constantinople, and after being baptized, returned home with his wife.

Of the Northumbrian kingdom.

After Oswald's death Northumbria was once more divided into two kingdoms. Oswy, brother of Oswald, reigned in Bernicia, and Oswyne, son of Osric, in Deira; but after seven years Oswyne was slain through the treachery of Count Humbald by the agents of Oswy. The place of the murder is called by Bede, Ingetlingum.[1] Odilwald succeeded Oswyne in Deira.

Of the papacy: pope Martin I.

In the notice of the next pope, Martin I., the points dwelt on are, that an assassin who intended to murder the pontiff was struck blind during his attempt, and that Pope Martin was banished by Constantine, as we have already noticed.[2]

---

[1] Identified with Gilling near Richmond in Yorkshire. The date was A.D. 651, and the agent in the murder was an officer named Ethelwine. See Bede, H. E., iii. 14.

[2] There is great confusion in the Latin text at this point, which must have existed also in the time when the versions were made. The exarchs of Ravenna at this time were the agents of the imperial authority in Italy. The exarch in the early part of Pope Martin's pontificate was Theodore Calliopas. After him came Olympius, and according to Platina (fol. 44 b.) it

The death of Paulinus bishop of Rochester is noticed, and also of Felix already named as first bishop of the East Angles. The date of the death of Bishop Paulinus was A.D. 644. He was succeeded by Bishop Ithamar, who was the first Saxon raised to that dignity, and Felix by Bishop Thomas. The reconversion of the people of Essex is the next subject dwelt on. Since the expulsion of Mellitus, the Christian faith had been suppressed in this province; but now King Sigebert, at the instance of King Oswy of Northumbria, abjured idolatry, and was baptized by Finan bishop of Lindisfarne; and Cedde, an Englishman, consecrated by Finan[1] was made bishop among the East Saxons. Here follows a narratio or story concerning Bishop Cedde drawn from some independent source. This is immediately succeeded by a renewed notice of the death of Oswyne, which leads to a narrative illustrating the liberality of Bishop Aidan, and the way in which King Oswyne, when rebuked by him, accepted the correction. Aidan is said to have foretold the death of this king, and himself to have not long survived him.[2] St. Cuthwas enjoined on the latter to bring the pope alive to Constantinople, or, if that were not possible, to put him to death in Italy. It is of the officer of Olympius that the story of the sudden blinding is told. So that "Spartarius Olympi" in the text probably means a javelin-bearer belonging to Olympius: Spartarius being, as the version of Trevisa takes it, = Spartharius, a bearer of the sparth or battle-axe (see Du Cange, s. v.). Unless some word such as lictor, or something equivalent thereto, have dropped out between Spartarius and Olympi, the former could hardly be a proper name. As the whole story is mythical, it should be mentioned that according to the best authorities it was Theodore Calliopas who sent Pope Martin to Constantinople. See Moreri, s. v. Martin, whose authorities are Anastasius in vit. Pontif, and Baronius, Annales.

[1] The Ithancastre, Penta, and Tilleburgh mentioned in this place in connexion with the subsequent preaching of Finan among the East Angles, are identified respectively with the Roman Othona, now St. Peters on the wall; the river Freshwell, and Tilbury. See Smith's Bede, H. E., notes, p. 127.

[2] The bishop only lived twelve days after the king's death. Oswy, to atone for the murder of Oswyne, founded a monastery at Ongetlinbert saw the soul of St. Aidan borne by angels into heaven. The death of St. Birinus is next recorded. His episcopate had continued for fourteen years.

Pope Eugenius I.

Pope Eugenius I. held the pontificate for three years, but Higden says nothing of his actions, only noticing that this was the time when the abbey of Lestingay was founded, the land having been granted to Cedde by Odilwald king of Deira.

Cap. XVI. Archbishop Theodore of Canterbury.

Vitalian was pope after Eugenius for fourteen years, and he it was who sent into England that great ecclesiastical reformer, Archbishop Theodore. The two archbishops who preceded him, and who are just mentioned by Higden, were Honorius and Deusdedit, the latter of whom died, according to the Saxon Chronicle, in 664.

Mercia becomes Christian A.D. 655.

When Penda king of Mercia had been overthrown and slain at the battle of Wingfield[1] by Oswy king of Northumberland, the kingdom of Mercia, under Weda[2] the son of Penda, embraced the Christian faith. Weda had already married Elfleda the daughter of Oswy, and a son of Oswy had married Weda's sister. We next come to a notice of Benedict Biscop, who was a minister of King Oswy, and first had charge of the education of the historian Bede. He was the first abbot of the monastery of Wearmouth, and made many journeys to Rome, and returned from thence very largely supplied with books, and also with relics, for which he found a place in the monasteries of Peter and Paul, which he founded on the Wear. He also introduced foreign artizans into England, and the art of glazing windows is especially mentioned as brought in by him. Higden quotes Bede's panegyric upon his master. By a retrospective glance he then goes back to the slaughter of Anna by Penda king of Mercia, and this leads the way to some particulars of the death of Penda himself, which has not hitherto been fully noticed in the text. It is also told how Abbot Bothulph founded the monastery of Icanno, i.e., Boston in Lincolnshire. We are also informed of Oswy's vow before the battle between him and Penda, which no doubt, to Higden's mind, had great effect on the result. The Northumbrian monarch promised to devote his daughter Elfleda to the religious life, as it was then called, and also to build and endow twelve abbeys. Both these parts of his vow Oswy scrupulously fulfilled after his victory. His daughter was entrusted to St. Hilda, who was then presiding over the convent at Hertysey,[1] but who was afterwards the famous abbess of Whitby. Of the abbeys, six were founded in Deira and six in Bernicia. King Oswy seems to have ruled in Mercia as well as in Northumberland, for he is said to have ceded to his son-in-law Weda (or Peada) the kingdom of South Mercia, and when this latter monarch was murdered through the treachery of his wife, Oswy ruled over Mercia, till the Mercians rebelling set up Wulferus, another son of Penda, as their king.

Vow of Oswy before the fight at the river Winwed.

Power of king of Oswy in Mercia.

For the first time in this volume Higden makes mention of the kings of the Franks. He takes up their history with Clodoneus II.,[2] son of Dagobert, but only records that he caused one of the arms of the corpse of St. Denys to be cut off. Moreri, who relates that the king's intent was that the relic should be conveyed to his own oratory, calls the act "more pious than criminal."

[2] This is Clovis II., who reigned from A.D. 644–660. See Moreri, s. Clovis II.

Higden, on the contrary, says it was done "instigante "diabolo."

Lombard history.

From Paulus we have next an anecdote of Grimaldus king of the Lombards, which shows that even in those rude times an act of fidelity was not unappreciated.

Next is related the marriage of St. Etheldreda to Egfrid, son of king Oswy, but more will be said of her in connexion with the abbey at Ely, in a later passage.

Hunarus, prince of the Saracens, is said to have built a Mahometan temple in Jerusalem at this period.

Kingdom of Kent: Egbert reigns nine years.

The history turns back now to the affairs of the kingdom of Kent. Ercombert dies, and is succeeded by his son Egbert. Archbishop Deusdedit having died, the kings of Kent and Northumberland sent Wyghard to pope Vitalian to be appointed archbishop; but he died of the plague, which then raged in England, and so the pope appointed the monk of Tarsus, Theodore. The mention of the plague gives Higden occasion to tell the story of a monk Egbert, who was sick, but was restored to health by virtue of his earnest prayers.

Cap. XVII. English church history.

This chapter, which deals mainly with the church history of England, commences with the record of the deaths of bishops Finan and Aidan, and the appointment of Colman as bishop of Northumbria. Mention is made also of the ordination of Wylfrid, by Agilbert bishop of Wessex. Then comes a long notice of a conference about the Paschal question. The decision given by king Oswy was, that it would be best to keep Easter according to the tradition of St. Peter's observance, lest that powerful door-keeper should close heaven against them. Bishop Colman did not approve of the decision, and retired from England to Scotland. Higden then gives a rule for the correct finding of Easter day. On the retirement of Colman, Wylfrid was made archbishop of York; and Bishop Agilbert, indignant at a subdivision of his diocese, went over into Gaul, whither Wylfrid went to be consecrated by him. Here is introduced from Paulus a story of the wish of Constans II. (here also wrongly called Constantinus) to recover Italy from the Lombards, and of his defeat.[1] The reason for the success of the Lombards is said to have been their devotion to the worship of St. John the Baptist, who in consequence was their great protector.

Archbishop Wylfrid.

During the absence of Wylfrid, it appears that Oswy, influenced by the Scottish party, appointed Cedda archbishop of York. When Wylfrid learned this, he retired submissively to his cloisters in the abbey of Ripon; but afterwards archbishop Theodore, in his visitation of the Northumbrian kingdoms, restored Wylfrid to the see to which he had been first appointed, and after a time Cedda was made by him bishop of Lichfield.[2] Here is inserted a notice of the building of the monastery of Abendon, and the death in Gaul of St. Leger, in the tyrannical times of Ebroynus, the major domus of king Theodoric.[3] Also the succession of pope Adeodatus (669–676), after Vitalian in whose time the body of St. Benedict, with that of his sister, St. Scholastica, are said to have been removed from Mount Cassinus, and conveyed to a monastery near Orleans.[4]

Cap. XVIII. Roman Empire: Constantine IV.

Omitting Constans II., Higden mentions as the next emperor Constantine IV., known as Pogonatus;[5] he was the son of Constans II. No particulars of his reign are [1] He was defeated by Grimbald king of the Lombards, but yet went to Rome, and spoiled that city. See Henninius, Hist. Imp. Rom., under Constans II.

[3] Constantinus here (p. 112) mentioned should, as above, be Constans II.

[4] Of this, Platina, fol. 45 a, 46 b, makes no mention. That which is especially noticed by him is the institution of Litanies by this pope for the mitigation of the alarming portents of his time, such as a comet which appeared for three months, great rains, and thunderstorms such as had never been known.

[5] Henninius remarks that this Constantine is by some called Constantine V., which of course he would be if his father were Constantine as Higden here and everywhere else names him. See Hist. Imp. Rom., p. 134, note.

given, except its duration, which was seventeen years. The death of Grimwald king of the Lombards, from the bursting of a vein after bloodletting, is noticed.[1]

Archbishop Theodore.

The history then dwells on the arrival of archbishop Theodore, and on his reforms. His birth, education, and age are recorded. Pope Vitalian associated with him, when he sent him to Britain, the abbot Adrian. On his arrival he went over the entire island, and introduced many new regulations. He had schools established where singing and mathematics were taught, and the study of both Greek and Latin was encouraged. He regulated and increased the episcopate. His treatment of Cedda has already been noticed. The character of the clerical order stood high in his time.[2]

St. Etheldreda.

The succession of Egfrid to the throne of Northumbria after Oswy's death is mentioned, but it is mainly done that a fuller notice may be given to St. Etheldreda who was his wife. Egfrid was her second husband, her first having been Tondebert, prince of the South Girwies. Her manner of life when she became abbess of Ely is described, and we are told that she survived in that dignity for seven years. The narrative then goes back to the synod which was assembled by archbishop Theodore.[3] Higden mentions five out of the ten provisions which were agreed to by this assembly.

[3] All the MSS. and versions give the name of the meeting place of the synod as Tedford or Tetford, but Bede writes it Herutford, and it was at Hertford, which was a frequent residence of the kings of Essex.

Agilbertus is mentioned here, after which the history turns to the kingdoms of Kent and Wessex.

Egbert king of Kent, was succeeded by his brother Lothair, and Kenwalcus king of Wessex left his kingdom, as some say, under the dominion of his wife Sexburga, at his death, though Bede says that for ten years it was subdivided among several petty princes. Kingdoms of Kent and Wessex.

Chad bishop of Lichfield died, and was succeeded by Wynfrid, but he was soon deposed, and Sexwolfus put into his place. Sexwolfus had been abbot of Medehamstede, i.e., Peterborough. In the papacy Bonus[1] (676–678) succeeded Adeodatus, but only held the papal power for a year and a half, and Higden mentions no more than this. He next proceeds to notice the monastic foundations of St. Erkenwold, who was third Bishop of London. These were two monasteries, one at Chertsey in Surrey, and the other at Barking in Essex. Ethelburga, sister of the founder, was abbess of the latter. Death of St. Chad.

The chronicle now turns to the kingdom of Wessex. Oskwyne[2] became king when Sexburga had either died or been expelled, and reigned three years. He made himself famous by a great victory which he gained over Wulferus king of Mercia at a place called Wydenhale in the text, which Lappenberg (i. 256) identifies with Bedwin in Wiltshire. After Wulferus, Etheldred became king of Mercia. The widow of Wulferus, Ermenilda, with her daughter, afterwards the famous St. Werburg, became nuns at Ely. After a short notice of the wintering of the Danes in England, which proceeding marks a stage when their inroads had gone beyond the mere desire of plunder, the chronicler returns to his notice of the family Kingdoms of Wessex and of Mercia.

of Wulferus, of which both male and female members attained great fame for sanctity. It was through the influence of Kyneswyda, a sister of Wulferus, who was wife of King Offa, that that monarch took his pilgrimage to Rome. The chapter concludes with the mention of the papacy of Agatho (A.D. 678), in whose time was held the sixth council of Constantinople, against the errors of the Monothelites.[1]

Pope Agatho and the sixth council of Constantinople.

Cap. XIX. Thierri I. king of the Franks.

English affairs.

This chapter opens with the mention of Theodorus as king of the Franks. He succeeded Clothaire his father,[2] according to Higden's statement, and reigned eighteen years. Afterwards turning to the affairs of England, mention is made of the invasion of Kent by the king of Mercia, Etheldred; of the fourth journey of Benedict Biscop to Rome, at which time he is said to have brought back with him John the precentor; of a great battle near the Trent fought between Etheldred and Egfrid king of Northumbria. After this the history proceeds with the expulsion of Wylfrid from his see by king Egfrid. This was done with the sanction of Theodore the archbishop, and is said to have been at the instigation of the wife[3] whom Egfrid married after Etheldreda's retirement into the cloister. The injured prelate appeals to Rome, and he is heard, and furnished by pope Agatho with a letter in which his deprivation was pronounced uncanonical. Of this, however, the authorities in England took no heed, but imprisoned the aggrieved bishop, Deprivation of Wylfrid.

[1] It was at this council that the title of Œcumenical or Universal bishop, which Pope Gregory had not only denounced in others but rejected for himself, was ascribed to Agatho by his representatives, and the bishops of Rome henceforth usually assumed it. See Robertson's Church History, iii. 2, and notes.

[2] This statement of Higden evidently refers to Thierri I., but he was the son of Clovis II., and not of Clothaire. See Moreri, s. v.

[3] As two bishoprics were actually founded in the place of the one which Wylfrid had held, it has been suggested that the wish to do this was pleaded as an excuse for the apparently harsh proceedings against Bishop Wylfrid. Soames, Ang. Sax. Ch., p. 70.

nor when he was released did he succeed in obtaining restoration. He therefore passed into the kingdom of the South Saxons, and began the work of an evangelist there. The missionary spirit was strong in Wylfrid, for even when he was on his way to Rome to prosecute his appeal, being cast by contrary winds on the coast of Frisia, he commenced the work of teaching among the natives, which was afterwards carried out more fully by St. Wyllebrod. Miracles are said to have attended the coming of Wylfrid into Sussex. He is also said to have taught the inhabitants improved methods of fishing.

Wylfrid preaches in Frisia.

Higden then records the death of Oskwyne and the succession of Kentwyne in Wessex; the death of bishop Leutherius and the succession of Hedda at Winchester; the death of St. Audoen, bishop of Rouen, and the birth of Bede. Leo II. becomes pope (A.D. 683) after Agatho, but as elsewhere, nothing is said of the acts of the pontiff, though Platina speaks of his pontificate in the most laudatory terms.[1] The deaths of St. Etheldreda and also of St. Hilda are next mentioned, and a somewhat fuller notice is given of the latter, and of the monastery of Whitby over which she presided. This includes a brief account of Cædmon, the first British poet, and the story of his suddenly imparted poetical gifts. Then (from Henry of Huntingdon) we have an account of the council of Hatfield. The presence there of John the Precentor, whom Benedict Biscop had brought over from Rome, is recorded, and it is then mentioned that Mercia was about this time divided into five dioceses.[2] After a story of Cunebert king of the Lombards, and the usual brief notice of pope Benedict II.,[1] A.D. 684, the history proceeds with an account of Mercia and of Wessex, and of the monasteries on the Wear built by Benedict Biscop. To Benedict's care Bede was committed at the age of seven years, and by him transferred to the tuition of abbot Colfrid. The appointment of Cuthbert as bishop of Hexham introduces a brief notice of him, which is succeeded by a description of Egfrid's wars against Scotland. In Wessex Cedwalla succeeds Kentwyne, and Alfrid becomes king of Northumbria on the death of his brother Egfrid. The chapter closes with the mention of the Saracen devastations in north Africa, and with the death of Constantine IV., which occurred A.D. 685.

Of Bede's youth.

Cap. xx.

In the empire Justinian II. succeeds Constantine his father; and after pope Benedict first comes John V. and then Conon.[2] Quoted from Bede we next have a record of the changes in the kingdom of Kent down to the succession of Withred.[3] Previous to his accession the kingdom had been overrun by Cedwalla of Wessex. Bishop Wylfrid is invited to the northern see of Hexham, and Sergius succeeds Conon in the papacy (A.D. 687).

Kingdom of Kent.

The papacy.

This pope is not left with the usual brief mention, for we are told that he appointed the Agnus Dei to be thrice sung in the mass, and by Divine revelation discovered a great portion of the holy cross. Turning to notice the Franks, Pipinus the mayor of the palace and some of his acts are noticed, and from Paulus is drawn an account how the kings of France became the mere puppets of the mayors of the palace. The death of St. Cuthbert, and the succession of Wylfrid are recorded, and king Cedwalla's death at Rome, and also his epitaph. After this we have a digression on the orthography of this monarch's name, a brief notice of the succession of Ine, the deaths of Benedict Biscop and of archbishop Theodore, and the expulsion of Wylfrid from his bishopric. He appeals once more to Rome, but the king Alfrid refused to recognise the authority of Rome. Wyllebrod's mission to Germany is next alluded to, and the building of the monastery of Evesham. Then follows the succession of Clovis III.[1] in France, and a peace between Ine of Wessex and the people of Kent. A longer mention is accorded to the banishment of the emperor Justinian and his return. This banishment was for ten years (695–705). The story of the mutilation of this emperor, from which he is known as Rhinotmetus, is also recorded.[2]

Of Justinian II.

Leo (i.e. Leontius) is named as emperor at the commencement of this chapter, and the succession of Childebert after Clovis in France (A.D. 695). Then follows a somewhat longer notice of St. Guthlac,[3] the founder of the monastery of Crowland, and some particulars concerning that foundation. A short mention is made of the resurrection and revelations of Dricthelm, which is

Cap. xxi. Childebert king of the Franks.

[1] Here Higden calls Clovis or Clodoneus the son of Pepin le Bref (Pipinus Brevis or Vetulus), and says that Pepin made his son king after the death of Thierri. The Pepin here referred to is Pepin d' Heristal, who was most powerful, as mayor of the palace, under Clovis III., Childebert, and Dagobert III. Pepin le Bref, the first of the Carlovingian dynasty, became king of France in 751, while Pepin d' Heristal died in 714.

[2] The Leo Patricius of the text, by whom the mutilation was perpetrated, is elsewhere called Leontius, and is that Leontius who was raised to the empire on the banishment of Justinian, and reigned for about three years. During the remaining seven years of that banishment of Justinian, Apsimarus, otherwise called Tiberius, filled the imperial throne. See Henninius, p. 136, note.

[3] An interesting life of St. Guthlac in Saxon, with an English translation by C. W. Goodwin, gives a very full history of the deeds ascribed to this famous monk, expanding largely the brief notice of him in the text, especially in the matter of his power over unclean spirits.

drawn from the account in Bede, but much abbreviated.[1] The Roman empire is next noticed, wherein Tiberius (or Apsimarus) deposes Leontius, and is in turn deposed and slain (as was also his predecessor), by the restored Justinian, who was helped back to the throne by the power of the Turks and Bulgarians.[2] The council of Aquileia, held A.D. 698, is mentioned, but no hint is given of the character of its deliberations,[3] and from the text it would be confused with the council of Constantinople of A.D. 553, for Higden's notice is entirely erroneous. He then proceeds to speak of (as Leo III.) a pope who sat for two years after Sergius, but being intruded into the papal chair by the civil power, is not noticed in the catalogue of the popes.[4] The visit of bishop Arnulph[5] to Britain, and his conferences with Adamnan, in consequence of which that abbot wrote his work on the marvels of the sacred places, is next narrated, and the fact that Bede owed to that work some of the materials of his history is stated.

[1] In Higden and the versions the name is Brithwold, or some near approach to that form.

[2] The notice of Justinian's vengeance on his enemies is taken (though Higden has not inserted any reference) from Paulus de Gest. Langob. vi., 12, where it is said, "quoties "truncas emungebat nares, aliquem "e Leontii partibus mactari præ- "cepit."

[3] Higden calls it "Quinta synodus "universalis," and says it was held "sub Sergio," which would mean rather "under his presidency" than in his time. The facts are that this was a heretic council [Mansi only calls it concionabulum] held to oppose the fifth general council of Constantinople, and to support what are known as the "tria capitula," by which name the doctrines taught by Theodore of Mopsuestia and others were indicated. Paulus Diaconus, v. 14, says of this assembly: "Hoc tempore synodus "Aquileiæ facta, ob imperitiam "fidei, quintum universale conci- "lum suscipere diffidit, donec salu- "taribus beati Sergii papæ monitis "instructa, et ipsa cum ceteris "Christi ecclesiis annuere consen- "sit." dom to Kenred his nephew, became a monk at Bardeney[1] are next mentioned; then follows the record of the papacy of John VII., and of the subdivision of the diocese of Winchester, another bishop's see being founded at Sherborne. With a list of the bishops then most noted in England the chapter is brought to a close.

Bishopric of Sherborne founded.

Still dwelling on the times of Justinian II., and of his expulsion and return, Higden tells that Tiberius his son was his colleague in the empire for six years. It is said that Justinian's cruelty in the destruction of the place of his exile caused an insurrection against him, in which Philippicus Bardanes overcame him, and succeeded to the imperial power. The death of Alfrid king of Northumbria, and the succession of his son of eight years old,[2] Osred by name, are next mentioned, as is the visit of Kenred of Mercia to Rome, accompanied by the son of the king of Essex. Colred nephew of Kenred thus succeeded to the Mercian kingdom. The brief pontificate of Sisinnius, and the succession of Constantine I., are recorded. A longer notice is given to the life, works, and virtues of St. Adhelm. The death of St. Wilfrid and the record of his epitaph, is followed by a notice of the death of abbot Adrian, who had been the fellow worker of archbishop Theodore, and the tutor of Alcuin. After some remarks on the proper time of observing Easter, introduced in consequence of an application made by the king of the Picts to abbot Colfrid for information, the history reverts to the doings of the emperor Philippicus Bardanes[3] (A.D. 711) in his brief reign of a year

[1] William of Malmesbury adds (Scriptores, post Bedam, p. 28) that he subsequently became abbot of the monastery.

[2] The possibility of such a succession was due to the power of the ealdorman Berhtfrith, who protected the interests of the youthful monarch for his reign of eleven years. The mother of Osred was sister of Ine king of Wessex, and this fact may have had some influence in maintaining the rule of Osred, though he was so mere a child. See Lappenberg, i. 210.

(A.D. 713–716), in whose times Dagobert II. was reigning in France, having succeeded Childebert in A.D. 711. Gregory II. followed after pope Constantine, who had died in A.D. 714; about which date St. Guthlac died at Crowland. The battle of Wodennesburgh,[2] between Ine king of Wessex, and Colred king of Mercia, occurred A.D. 715. In this fearful conflict it could not be said on which side the slaughter was the greatest. The quick succession on the imperial throne is next related. Theodosius III. reigned for a year, his predecessor having been conquered and compelled to enter a monastery; which lot was also Theodosius' own, when he was deposed by Leo III. The Saracen assaults on Constantinople are mentioned, and the fame of Johannes Damascenus, at the mention of whom Higden makes a digression to prevent this Johannes being confounded with Johannes Heremita. Miracles were wrought in connexion with both men, but Heremita was the earlier in date by many years.

with Pepin le Bref), and his power came into the hands of his son Charles Martel, afterwards so famous for his reforms and conquests.[1] The spoliation of the church which Charles carried out in order to support his soldiers, is said to have been punished in another world, and this punishment witnessed by Eucherius bishop of Orleans. His body also is said to have been spirited away from its grave. After noticing a great flood in the Tiber at this date, the history returns to the kings of Mercia, on which throne Ethelbald succeeds Colred. His conquests are mentioned, and his final overthrow by Cuthred king of Wessex. The ecclesiastical history of England occupies the rest of the chapter, and in it are comprised the miracles of St. Egwyne, a notice of St. John of York, and his successor known as Wylfrid junior, the erection of the monastery of Glastonbury by Ine king of Wessex, with some notices of the saints whose bones have been either originally laid in, or else translated to that famous abbey.

British ecclesiastical history.

Taking a further notice of the emperor Leo III., Higden mentions the distinction between δουλεία as a service which may be paid to a creature, and λατρεία only to God. Pope Gregory was earnest in his opposition to the imperial edicts,[2] and was aided in his opposition by Germanus of Constantinople. The Welsh for a while grew more independent.[1] the same time Bede also died. Higden gives a brief summary of the events of his life, and discusses the question of whether he ever visited Rome or not. He was invited to do so by pope Sergius. The epitaph which is given is, as Higden says, unworthy of the tomb of such a man.

Ricold, a duke of Frisia.

A story is next told of Ricold, a duke of Frisia, who, when about to be baptized, inquired whether more of his forefathers were in heaven or hell, and being told there were more of them in hell, declined to proceed farther with his baptism, electing rather to join the large company of his progenitors. Satan having got such a hold on him, he died within three days. The story of St. Frideswyde of Oxford is told. years. Cuthbert bishop of Hereford is made archbishop of Canterbury on the death of Nothelmus.

Cap. xxv. Constantine V. emperor.

Constantine V. succeeds (A.D. 741) his father Leo, and reigned thirty-three years.[1] This monarch inherited his father's hostility to images, which he caused to be destroyed everywhere. He likewise opposed the Monothelites. Ethelard king of Wessex dying, is succeeded by Cuthred, who had many wars with Ethelbald king of Mercia. Cuthred is succeeded by Sigebert, but he for his ill government is soon expelled, and afterwards slain by the swineherd of a nobleman whom he had put to death during his reign. Charles Martel dies, leaving two sons, Pepin and Carloman, the latter of whom soon retires into a monastery. The son of Theirri III. was reigning at this time in France as Childeric III. Pepin had determined to depose the Merovingians, and transfer the crown to himself and his posterity. He won the clergy to his side by various means, and in A.D. 751, when his plans were matured, he sent ambassadors to Pope Zachary to propound the following question: whether the throne of the Merovingians should be considered as rightfully belonging to them in their present state of useless insignificance, or whether it did not more legitimately belong to him who exercised all the power and sustained all the responsibility of the government. The pope answered in a manner favourable to Pepin, and in March A.D. 752, in an assembly of bishops and nobles, he caused himself to be proclaimed king of the Franks, and was anointed by St. Boniface. Childeric III.[2] was deposed, and confined in the convent of St. Omer till his death. Pope Zachary, who succeeded Gregory III., filled the papal throne for twelve years. A marvellous story grandson of Ethelbald. Offa reigned thirty-nine years. Higden gives an enumeration of his conquests, and mentions more particularly how he transferred the metropolitan see from Canterbury to Lichfield. The payment of Rome-scot and the making of Offa's dyke are noticed, and the alliances which this prince sought with other royal families. It was by him that Alcuin was sent to Charlemagne.

Notice is next taken of the introduction of organs into France, the first having been sent to Pepin le Bref by the emperor Constantine IV. The succession of the Northumbrian kings was Egbert, Oswulf, and then Moll, called also Ethelwold. Paul I. (A.D. 757–767) succeeds Cap. xxvi. Charles the Great.

With the exception of the last sentence the whole of this chapter is occupied with a notice of Charles the Great (A.D. 768–814). We are told how the widow of his brother Carloman sought an asylum at the court of Lombardy; of his siege of Pavia,[1] and his victory over Desiderius the Lombard monarch. His further conquests are enumerated, as are the stories of Roland and Oliver, and of Aygolandus the Spanish prince, and of his reason for refusing Christian baptism. On the authority of archbishop Turpin a description is given of Charles' personal appearance, of his great strength, his manner of life, the education of his children, and his fondness for learning. Peter of Pisa and Alcuin are mentioned among his instructors. He was such a lover of learning that he had a reader employed while at his meals, and his favourite author was Augustine "De Civitate Dei." Character of Charles.

[1] Higden only says that the siege was undertaken at the request of Pope Adrian. The origin of the war was in the conduct of Charles towards Hermengarde, daughter of Desiderius [Didier], whom he married, but repudiated within a year. Her father appealed to the pope, and when the pontiff refused to move in the cause, the Lombard troops invaded the papal territory. It was on this account that the pope's request was made to Charles that he would invade Lombardy. See Moreri (s.vv. Hermengarde and Charles I.), who says that the marriage had, in the first instance, been brought about by Bertha, the mother of Charles, against his will.

A description of his food, somewhat differing from the former, is also inserted, and his love for sacred things, relics and the like, does not go without notice. A church of St. Mary which he built at Aix is mentioned, and that he founded as many monasteries as there are letters of the alphabet. We are told how he bestowed his wealth before his death; of a joke between him and Alcuin about the difference between a Scot and a sot, which might be taken as evidence very contradictory of what has been before recorded of the temperance of Charles. Higden endeavours to reconcile conflicting dates in the reign of Charles,[1] and mentions his death in the fourteenth year of his empire (A.D. 814). St. James of Compostella, we are informed, saved the soul of Charles from the fiends, and we have this on archbishop Turpin's authority.

Papal history.

Cap. XXVII.

Going back to history of the papacy, the name of Stephen III. is next in order, and in the next chapter Adrian I. The former of these is said to have revoked all that his predecessor [2] had enacted, and the latter to have assembled two councils, in the latter of which, held at Rome, Charles the Great was present, and obtained for himself a voice in future papal elections.

Kingdoms of Northumbria and Mercia.

The history turns now, for a moment, to the British kingdoms, and mentions Etheldred as king of Northum-

[1] It is remarkable that Higden makes no mention of the liberality of Charles the Great to the see of Rome. He not only confirmed the large grants of his father Pepin, but added to them very greatly, and extended the temporal power of the pontiff, though probably intending by this means to make the pope his representative and the agent of his power in Italy. Nor does Higden say anything of the "School of the "palace" at Aix, which was at least as great a distinction of this reign as the building of the church of St. Mary. The great contemporary authorities for the life of Charles are Eginhard, De Vita et Gestis Caroli Magni, and Turpin, de Gestis Caroli Magni.

[2] By his predecessor is evidently meant that Constantine whom the lay power had forcibly introduced, but who had been rejected (see text, p. 246) by the zeal of the faithful. The acts revoked were not the acts of Pope Paul I.

bria, and Offa as reigning in Mercia, and that the latter, with pope Adrian's consent, removed the archiepiscopal see from Canterbury to Lichfield. The four years duration of the empire of Leo IV. (A.D. 775–780) is next noticed, and the succession of his son Constantine VI., who with his mother Irene reigned ten[1] years (A.D. 780–797), and she five years alone, after causing the deposition and murder of her son. But vengeance came upon her. Nicephorus (called Logothetes) headed a revolution against Irene in Constantinople, in A.D. 802, whereby she was dethroned, and afterwards banished to Lesbos, where she died the next year.[2] Nicephorus was saluted as emperor by the army, but his first act was to conclude a treaty with Charles the Great,[3] by which the limits of the two sovereignties were defined, and wherein Charles was recognised as the emperor of the West. After a story of the discovery at this time of a gold plate with a wondrous inscription, Higden turns again to English history, and mentions the battle of Bensington,[4] between Kenulph king of Wessex and king Offa, in which victory declared for the Mercians. The Northumbrians expelled their king Ethelbert,[5] and elected Alfwold in his stead,

[1] This is a mistake. Constantine came to the imperial throne in 780, and it was not till 797 that his mother caused his eyes to be put out, and afterwards had him murdered that she might reign alone. See Henninius, p 150.

[2] See Henninius, ut supra.

[3] A project had been set on foot soon after the coronation of Charles the Great as emperor (which took place A.D. 800) to unite the empire of the East with that of the West by a marriage between Charles and Irene, but though this scheme had been steadily pursued (some say through the advice of Pope Leo), and preliminaries had been in some degree arranged, the plan was brought to naught by the revolution under Nicephorus. who reigned for eleven years. The violent death of Kenulph is related, and the vengeance which was taken on his murderers. Kenulph was succeeded by no direct heir, but by Brithric, who is merely said to have been descended from Cerdic. He reigned fifteen years. For the domestic security of his kingdom he expelled Egbert the son of Alkmund (afterwards the famous monarch under whom England was made one kingdom), who taking refuge in Gaul, in later days returned and became king.

Affairs of Wessex.

Second council of Nicæa (A.D. 786).

During this time was held the second council of Nicæa, of which the object is wrongly stated in Higden,[1] for he says that at this assembly the question of the procession of the Holy Ghost from the Father and the Son was definitely settled.[2]

Of the church in England.

Death of Brithric king of Wessex.

Richulphus succeeds Lulle as archbishop of Canterbury. He built the church of St. Albans. A daughter of king Offa, named Ethelburga, is married to Brithric king of Wessex, and she is said to have poisoned her husband, when she intended only to poison some favourite[3] of his against whom she was enraged. In their detestation of this woman the people of Wessex resolved that no future consort of their king should be permitted to occupy a royal throne by the side of her husband or to bear the title of queen, so that henceforth the queen was called "hlæfdige," lady. Finding her presence could be no longer tolerated in her own country, Ethelburga with her treasures went to the court of Charlemagne,[1] who on her presenting him with various gifts, said to her, "Choose which you will marry, me or my son." To which she answered that she should prefer the son. "If "you had chosen me," said Charles, "you should have "had my son, but having chosen my son, you shall have "neither him nor me." He thereupon deprived her of her treasure, and placed her at the head of a monastery, but being found guilty of immorality, she was expelled, and ultimately died a beggar in the city of Pavia.[2]

[1] This council was called to settle the question of images. Its sanction was given to the use of paintings and other representations on a flat surface, not of works of sculpture. To this limitation the Greek Church has ever since adhered. See Robertson's Church History, iii. 138.

[2] The question of the double procession was set forth at the Council of Frankfort, where Charles the Great was present in A.D. 794. See Lumby on the Creeds, p. 93.

End of Ethelburga.

Marks like the sign of the cross were found on the clothes of Englishmen at this time, and there was a rain of blood. These signs may have been a forewarning of the crusades, or of Danish invasions, but that Higden leaves unsettled, with a "God only knows." The Danes (he however adds) did come for the first time just at this period, and kill the king of Wessex.[3]

Portents in England.

In Northumbria Alfwold is killed by his nobles. Osred, called "nepos" of Alfwold, is the next king, but he is soon expelled, and then follows Etheldred, son of a former king Ethelwald. But he too was murdered. Then the ealdorman Oswald was proclaimed king, but was only in power a few days before he fled to Lindisfarne for safety. After him Ardulphus, another ealdorman, is chosen, and for one year holds the royal power, and then during seventy years there were six other kings, the last of whom were Osbrith and Elle, who were slain at York by the Danes in A.D. 867, and after this the Danes were masters in Northumbria till the days of Athelstan. succeeded first by Egfert his son, and then by Kenulph a son of Cuthbert, and great-great-grandson of Penda.[2] This monarch, after a struggle, obtained possession of the kingdom of Kent. The king of that district at this time was Egbert, otherwise called Pren. And Higden relates the very mild treatment which this prince received at the hands of his conqueror, though some authorities tell a very different story.[3] Kenulph made Canterbury once more the archiepiscopal city. He was in the end buried at Winchcombe, and was succeeded by his son Kenelm. The remainder of the chapter is occupied almost entirely with gathering up the threads of history which lead to the union of all England under Egbert. There is, however mentioned a darkness of seventeen days continuance which occurred at Constantinople, and some fiery dragons seen in the air in Britain during the reign of Brithric, and supposed to foretell Danish invasion. [1] This prince was a suitor for the hand of a daughter of King Offa, and had been received in a splendid manner at the Mercian court; but during the night after his arrival there he was summoned to the king's presence as if on business of importance, and was murdered in one of the passages through which he went. Some ascribe the deed to the king, some to his queen. See Sax. Chron. A.D. 792; also Flor. Wigorn. A.D. 793, and Lappenberg, i. 235.

[2] This is Higden's statement. The truth is, that Kenulph was descended from Kenwalcus, a brother of Penda, Cuthbert (Kenulph's father) being the fifth in a direct line from Kenwalcus. See Genealogical Tables, Lappenberg, vol. i. 290.

[3] The Saxon Chronicle (anno 796) and Simeon of Durham (anno 798) tell how Pren was deprived of his eyes, and had his hands cut off. They agree that he was set at liberty at the dedication of Winchcombe church, but if the mutilation be a true story there is not much praise due to Kenulph. It should, however, be mentioned that there is no word about the mutilation either in Ethelward or Florence, and Malmesbury dwells long on the clemency of the king.

story is told of the mutilation and blinding, and then of the marvellous restoration of the speech and sight of a Pope Leo. But as he is called Pope Leo IV., and is said afterwards to have crowned Charles the Great,[1] we may rest sure there is a mistake, though as the story is not related of Leo III.[2] by other writers, we cannot exactly say to what event Higden is referring.

Egbert king of Wessex.

The return of Egbert the son of Alkmund to Wessex is noticed, and his conquest of Bernulph the Mercian usurper at Ellandûn,[3] in Hampshire (A.D. 823), a victory which enabled him to become master of Mercia, Kent, Northumbria, and a part of Wales, in addition to his own kingdom. Whereupon he caused himself to be crowned king of the whole country at Winchester, and called the land, as it is now called England (A.D. 827).

Egbert king of England.

Death of Alcuin.

The deaths of St. Alkmund, and of Alcuin are noticed at this date, the latter of whom had been placed by Charles the Great over the monastery of St. Martin at Tours. This was the time when St. Giles lived, also Paulus the historian of the Lombards. Michael I. the emperor of the East (A.D. 811–813) is named, for he retired into a monastery in his third year on account of an eclipse which happened at that time. Rinderpest was not unknown at this period. In the last year of Charles the Great (A.D. 814) the great wooden bridge which he had made over the Rhine at Mainz was burned.

account of the family of Louis.[1] Great part of the story deals with the doings of Charles the Bald, the son of Louis by his second wife, Judith, daughter of Guelph count of Bavaria. This lady is said to have been of too close a relationship to Louis, and to this Higden ascribes all the misery, and tells how the king was rebuked by the bishop of Utrecht and for a time put away Judith.

Rebellion of the sons of Louis.

The rebellion which broke out (A.D. 830) because of the formation of a kingdom for the infant prince Charles out of the territories already assigned by Louis to his son Lothaire, is noticed, but little is said of the remainder of his reign, though the result of its troubles was the dismemberment of the empire of Charles the Great. The papal throne was filled after the death of Leo III. by Stephen IV., and after him by Paschalis. It was by the latter Pontiff that Lothaire was crowned emperor. Paschalis also established a congregation of Greek monks at Rome in the church of Praxedis.[2] The death of Kenulph, and the succession of Kenelm in Mercia, is next noticed, and the story of the murder of the latter, and of the marvellous way in which the murdered body was found, is related, and also God's visitation on the murderess.[3]

[1] Louis I., known as le Débonnaire, reigned A.D. 814–840. He was a feeble monarch, and entirely under the control of his second wife. In A.D. 830 the empire was for a time virtually transferred to his sons, though Louis retained the name of emperor; and when afterwards he was restored to power the same kind of rebellion was repeated more than once. Louis died while on a campaign against his third son, known as Louis of Germany.

[2] Platina mentions the rebuilding of the church of Praxedis, but says nothing of the Greek monks. See fol. 60 b.

[3] The sister of Kenelm, whose name Higden writes Quendreda, otherwise written Cwenthryth, was his murderess; the Heskebert (Æsceberht) whom she employed as her agent was tutor to the young king, who was little more than seven years old when he was murdered. See Lappenberg, i. 241.

two years, and was killed in an expedition against the East Angles, against whom he marched because they had aided Egbert of Wessex to victory at Ellandûn. After him came Ludecans (or Ludeca), but was soon slain; and then Wyglanus,[1] who reigned for thirteen years.

Eugenius II.[2] (A.D. 824–827) sat on the Papal throne between three and four years.[3] All that is said of him is, that he presented to the abbot of St. Denis the bones of St. Sebastian. Eugenius was succeeded by Valentinus, who died within a few days[4] of his accession to the Papal throne. In this time St. Swithin was born at Winchester. Gregory IV. (A.D. 827–844) followed Valentinus in the Papacy, and sat for sixteen[5] years or more. Popes of Rome. Birth of St. Swithin.

At this time lived Theodulphus, who become bishop of Orleans, and Rabanus Maurus, the famous archbishop of Mainz. Some notice of the works of the latter prelate is given. The Danes at this date landed in the isle of Sheppey, where for the first time they wintered in England, and defeated king Egbert next year at Carrum (Charmouth) in Dorsetshire. A marvel is related of a fasting girl, even in these early days. The Soldan of Babylon overran Italy at this time, being invited and aided by a party of traitors at Rome. But he and his troops were drowned in a storm on their way over the Mediterranean into Africa.[6] Danes in England.

[1] Called Witlaf by Ingulf, who says he was allied by marriage to Colwulf, a former king.

[2] Higden says wrongly, quartus, but there is no trace of a variation in either the MSS. or versions.

[3] Where a reign extends into another year, even when that year is not nearly completed, Higden almost always gives the incomplete year as a whole year; thus here he writes, "annis quatuor," p. 310.

[4] Platina says, "quadragesimo pontificatus sui die moritur," and gives marvellous laudation to the gravity, learning, and eloquence of Valentinus. Higden's "quatuor annis," for the duration of this Pontificate is an error. See Platina, fol. 61 a.

[5] Having assigned four years to Valentinus, Higden here gives the Pontificate of Gregory as only of thirteen years duration.

[6] Platina, who gives an account of this Saracen invasion in his notice

Helmstan bishop of Winchester dies, and is succeeded by St. Swithin. The defeat of the Danes by king Egbert at Hengistdoun[1] is next mentioned. The death of king Egbert and the succession of Ethelwolf are then chronicled. The latter had been educated by Helmstan, and designed for the clerical life.[2] Towards the latter part of his reign he went to Rome, and took with him his youngest son, afterwards the famous king Alfred. His largesses to the church of St. Peter and other sacred objects are detailed, but Higden takes no notice of the anointing of Alfred, by the Pope, as king of England.[3] As Ethelwolf returned home, he married Judith the daughter of Charles the Bald, his former wife, the daughter of his cup-bearer, having died. Great indignation[4] was aroused because the king set his youthful wife on the throne beside him, in violation of the custom which had grown up since the crime of Ethelburga, that no queen should sit on the throne with her husband. A digression is here made to introduce the mention of a painful disease with which Alfred was afflicted, and for the cure of which he was sent to St. Modwenna into Ireland. This holy woman afterwards came to England, and was aided in many pious foundations by king Ethelwolf. With a notice of further Danish invasions, and some changes of the petty kings of Mercia, this chapter is brought to a close.

He had himself proclaimed sole emperor, but at the battle of Fontenay (25th June 841) he was defeated by the combined forces of his brothers Louis and Charles, and a partition of the dominions of Charles the Great was made at the treaty [1] of Verdun (A.D. 843). The Saracens took advantage of the disorders in Europe, to make another invasion. Sergius II. (A.D. 844–847) was the next pope in order.[2] From him came in the custom that the pope on his election should receive a new name, for Sergius had aforetime the unpleasant name of Pig-face,[3] which of course could not be retained by the occupant of the Pontifical throne. At this period the body of Helena, mother of Constantine the Great, was brought from Rome to Rheims; the Normans made their invasion into France; and Bertulph [4] son of Bernulph, petty king of Mercia, put St. Wystan to death. The conversion of the Bulgarian king and nation to Christianity is next recorded, and this is immediately followed by the mention of Ethelbert's succession to Ethelbald in the kingdom of England.[2] The papacy of Benedict III. (A.D. 855–858), and the death of St. Swithin, are just noticed. More is said of pope Nicolas I. (A.D. 858–867), who is compared to Gregory the Great, and a remonstrance of his with Louis II. of France is recorded, but not with any trustworthy foundation. Ethelred I. succeeded Ethelbert in England (A.D. 866–871). The Danes in his time were constantly attacking England. They put an end to the kingdom of Northumberland, and from thence extended their ravages southward, and were met by Burdred the petty king of Mercia, and on that account took refuge in York, where they stayed a year. Adrian II. (A.D. 867–872) next occupied the papal throne.[3] He admitted Louis II. to communion again, who had been excommunicated by his predecessor. The Danes continue to push their way south, and take up their quarters at Thetford. Higden next gives an account of the murder of Edmund, king of the East Angles, by Hynguar and Hubba, the Danish leaders. The brother of St. Edmund retired into a monastery, and so East Anglia came altogether into the hands of the Book VI. Cap. i. King Alfred.

The reign of Alfred lasted from A.D. 871–901. Higden tells the usual stories of his youthful zeal for learning, of his foundation of the university of Oxford, of his encouragement of learning, of his family, and his friends and counsellors, John the monk, and Grimwald the monk, and Plegmund the archbishop, and shows that Wales was in advance of England in learning at this date. Then he tells of the king's manner of bestowing his revenue, and ordering his time, and afterwards of his sufferings from the Danish invaders. In a confused passage, the list of kings of France and Roman emperors is carried down to the time of Charles the Fat[1] (ob. A.D. 887).

Danes in Mercia.

The Danes at Rependoun (Repton) expel Burdred the petty king of Mercia, and set up Colwolf in his stead, but he was merely a puppet removeable at will, and with him ended every trace of the Mercian kingdom. At this time Alfred for a short period made peace with these powerful invaders. The Hamburgenses, who lived about five miles from Repton, conveyed the body of St. Werburg to Chester for fear of the Danes. Rollo the Dane invaded Normandy, and in the end obtained (A.D. 911) a grant from Charles III. (A.D. 898–936) of Neustria and Armorica, on condition that he should own allegiance to the king of France.[1] The story of the upsetting of the French king by Rollo's rude mode of doing homage, is told by some as though the result was from the roughness of a soldier whom Rollo had deputed to perform the ceremony of homage in his stead.

[1] The kings of France after the death of Louis the Pious, were Charles the Bald, then his son Louis the Stammerer, who reigned a year and a half till April (A.D. 879). Then followed as joint kings Louis III. and Carloman, sons of Louis the Stammerer. As these two last left no male issue, the nobles adjudged the kingdom of France to the emperor Charles the Fat, grandson of Louis the Pious, and son of Louis the German. The two emperors during this period were Charles the Bald and Charles the Fat.

Rollo the Dane settles in France.

The first matter mentioned in this chapter is that Louis the Stammerer reigned two years in France. The history then returns to Alfred, and the Danish invaders of England. In A.D. 876 [2] the fleet of the Danes sailing for Exeter from Wareham in Dorsetshire are said to have lost one hundred and twenty ships by a storm, but a part of this force took the royal town of Chippenham on the Avon. Then came Alfred's time of greatest distress, but he was comforted by the appearance to him of St. Cuthbert, who assured him of victory in the end. From Athelney, where he and his followers had raised a fortress, Alfred issued in disguise and visited the Danish camp. Finding that success had made them careless, he attacked them near Selwood Forest,[3] with such success that Guttrun the Danish leader made peace, and consented to be baptized. His baptismal name was Athelstan. Going back to the history of France, the reign of Charles the Fat is noticed, and at this time we are told the counts of Flanders had their beginning. There is an error at this point in

Cap. II.

Guttrun is baptized.

Higden's narrative, it was Charles the Bald, and not Charles the Fat who had poison[1] administered to him by his Jewish physician Zedekias. There is a further error in saying that it was the daughter of Charles the Fat who was given in marriage to Rollo the Dane. The daughter of Charles the Simple was given to that conqueror as a wife[2] (A.D. 911) at the cession of Neustria and Armorica. But Rollo's son William Longsword and a daughter Gerlota were the children of another wife, Popa, daughter of Guy, called count of Salvanect.

Rollo the Dane and his family.

Dunwolf is made bishop of Winchester. King Alfred restores the town of Shaftesbury. Pope Martin[3] succeeds John VIII., and reigns from A.D. 882–884. Higden then mentions the one year's pontificate of Agapitus, a name which is not found in other lists of popes. Then follows Adrianus III. (A.D. 884–885). After whom Higden inserts Basilius, another addition not found in Platina or other lists, and after him Pope Stephen V. (A.D. 885–891) who was pope six years. The chapter contains a notice of a Danish attack on Rochester, which city was relieved by Alfred, who also gave chase to the Danish vessels, and captured sixteen of them. The Danes besiege Paris at this time. King Alfred repairs the city of London, sends alms to India and to Rome, and founds two monasteries, in one of which he makes his daughter abbess.

Cap. III. Repeating the mistaken story of the poisoning of Charles the Fat, Higden correctly states that that monarch was succeeded in his empire by Arnulph (A.D.

896–899) son of Carloman,[1] brother of Louis III. The baptism of Rollo is here noticed again, and the death of Guttrun the Dane. A quarrel is related about the miraculous virtue of the dead body of St. Martin bishop of Tours. King Alfred has four armies afoot against the Danes. Three Scotch pilgrims come by sea to Cornwall, and present themselves before King Alfred. Formosus is pope after Stephen (A.D. 891–896). He had been degraded into a lay position by Pope John VIII., but was restored to his clerical order by Pope Martin. Other popes mentioned in this chapter are Boniface VI., who sat for fifteen[2] days; then Stephen VI. who was on the throne for little more than a year, after which he retired into a monastery. He was succeeded by Romanus for four months. Then came Theodore II. for one month, John IX. for two years (A.D. 898–900). After him followed Benedict IV. (A.D. 900–903), Leo V. for two months, and Pope Christopher for the greater part of a year. All these five popes were in the reign of Charles the Simple.[3] Plegmund is made archbishop of Canterbury, and Alfred's successes against the Danes increase. Louis the son of Arnulph the emperor, is said by Higden to have reigned in France, but here our author is in error. The Louis here mentioned is Louis III. of Germany, who was emperor after his father Arnulph (A.D. 899-911). He was the last of the family of Charles the Great who sat on the imperial throne. The death of King Alfred took place A.D. 901. Higden quotes the epitaph of this king from Henry of Huntingdon.

[1] Carloman was not, as Higden states, the brother of Charles the Fat, but the son of Louis the Stammerer, and therefore brother of Louis III. and Charles the Simple.

Wessex over the whole of Britain. Higden makes some mention of Edward's family, but it is somewhat incomplete.[1] A story is told of how Edburga, one of his daughters, when only three years old, gave evidence of her vocation to the life of a nun. Pope Benedict IV. (A.D. 900–903) succeeds John IX., about which time dies Grimbald, Alfred's priest and teacher; and Plegmund ordains seven bishops in one year to the sees in England. Under the year A.D. 905 there is said to have been a famine in Ireland, the crops being destroyed by worms. Next is mentioned the rebellion of Clito Ethelwold[2] against Edward. The rebel occupied Wynburne near Bath, but was driven forth, and took refuge with the Danes in Northumbria. Ethelwold afterwards invaded Mercia, penetrating as far as Cricklade, and after crossing the Thames committed great ravages, and then retired into East Anglia. King Edward pursued and laid waste the district between St. Edmund's dyke and the river Ouse, and then led back his troops; but in an encounter between the laggard Kentish men, whom Edward had charged not to remain behind him, but who disobeyed his orders, it befel that Clito Ethelwold was slain on the Danish side, and so Edward was relieved from this enemy. A second notice is given to the papacy of Leo V. and Pope Christopher, and the troubles of the Roman see at this time, and then follows Sergius III.[3] (A.D. 904–911), whose insults to the dead body of Pope Formosus are recorded, as also the honour paid to Rebellion of Ethelwold.

Papal animosities.

[1] Edward had three wives: (1.) Egwyna, who was mother of Ethelstan, and one daughter; (2) Elfleda, mother of Ethelward, who died soon after his father, and Edwine, and six daughters; (3) Edgiva, mother of Edmund and Edred, and two daughters. See Lappenberg, ii. 99.

[2] This Ethelwold was the son of king Alfred's elder brother Ethelred. The rebellion seems to have been intended to recover some private possessions of which Ethelwold thought himself wrongly deprived by his uncle's will. See Lappenberg, ii. 85, and the note there.

the corpse when it was restored to St. Peter's, where all the statues did obeisance on its entry. The restoration of Chester by Ethelred of Mercia and his wife Elfleda is mentioned, as also a castle built at Hereford by King Edward, and the foundation of the monastery at Cluny by William of Burgundy. The bones of St. Oswald were transferred from Bardeney to Gloucester.

Cap. v. Conrad I. emperor.

The succession of Conrad I.[1] to the German empire (A.D. 912–919) is the first event noticed in the next chapter. In his time the empire passed into the hands of the Germans. But titular emperors of the West also reigned in Italy till the accession of Otho I., who combined the two conflicting claims.

English affairs.

The successes of Edward the Elder against the Danes at Totenhale (Tettenhall) in Staffordshire, and at Wodenesfeld, are next related. Ethelred, the petty king of Mercia, died at this time. His wife Elfleda was King Edward's sister, and continued to hold the government of Mercia, in which she displayed great energy, building and restoring many important towns, such as Runcorn, Bridgenorth, Tamworth, Stafford, and several others. The Danish landing on the shores of the Severn, and the carrying off of a British bishop,[2] whom King Edward redeemed with forty pounds, are next recorded; also the fortifications which were prepared against the Danish invaders at various points in the country, on the Avon and on the Ouse.

Popes of Rome.

Anastasius III. (A.D. 911–913) was pope for two years; then followed Lando for the brief space of five months, at which time the Hungarians invaded Italy.[3] John X. was the next occupant of the pontiff's chair, and held the papal power for fourteen years (A.D. 914–928). He was the son of pope Sergius III. He greatly aided Albericus, Marquis of Ravenna, in expelling the Saracens from Italy; but when a quarrel arose between the pope and the marquis, the latter encouraged the Hungarian inroads mentioned above. Rollo duke of Normandy dies[1] at this period (A.D. 927), and is succeeded by his son William Longsword. The further exploits of queen Elfleda, and the zeal for building cities which animated her and the king her brother, are next noticed. Henry,[2] son of Otho of Saxony, is the next German emperor (A.D. 920–936). He conquered the hosts of the Hungarians, and is said to have converted William Longsword to Christianity. Elfleda, the famous queen of Mercia, dies, and King Edward then takes Mercia into his own hands. Higden quotes the epitaph of Elfleda from Henry of Huntingdon. Edward built fortresses and established garrisons[3] in Mercia. King Edward died suddenly at Faringdon near Oxford, in the twenty-fourth year of his reign, and was succeeded by his eldest son Athelstan (A.D. 924–941), who was crowned at Kingston in Surrey. Dunstan, afterwards the famous abbot of Glastonbury, was born at this time. Athelstan marries his sister to Sithric the Danish king of Northumberland, and when her husband died, he united the northern kingdom to his own. Howel king of Wales and Constantine king of the Scots became subject princes to King Athelstan. That king gave another sister in marriage to Otho emperor of Germany, from whom he received large presents.[1] Leo VI. was pope (A.D. 928–929), not as Higden says four years and seven months, but seven months only.[2] Odo was made Bishop of Wilton ;[3] and on the death of Frithstan, Byrstan became Bishop of Winchester. The story of how the dead from their graves said "Amen" to prayers of the latter is told from William of Malmesbury. Byrstan was succeeded by a monk Elphegus, whose piety and prophetic gifts were highly celebrated. A marvellous evidence is next recorded to show that the Scots ought to be subject to the English. Stephen VII. (A.D. 929–931) was pope two years, and was succeeded by John XI. (A.D. 931–936), and he by Leo VII. (A.D. 936–939). Louis d'Outremer, the son of Charles the Simple and a daughter of King Edward of England, reigned in France after his father.[4] (A.D. 936–954). The Hugo mentioned on p. 432 is Hugh le Blanc, the count of Paris, and father of Hugh Capet. An anecdote is related of the emperor Otho I., who was emperor from A.D. 962 to English bishops.

Popes of Rome.

---

[1] Higden has here confused two stories. Athelstan gave one sister to Otho (afterwards the emperor), son of Henry the Fowler, but he also gave his sister Eadhild to Hugh the count of Paris, father of Hugh Capet, and it was from him that the marvellous gifts were sent. See William of Malmesbury, ii. 6, and Lappenberg, ii. 107.

[2] See Platina, fol. 70 a.

[3] This was the second bishop of Wilton, and he afterwards was the famous archbishop Odo.

[4] Higden makes no mention of the events which immediately preceded the death of Charles the Simple. In 922, in consequence of the incapacity of that monarch, Robert duke of France was proclaimed king, and crowned at Rheims. Haganon, the minister of Charles, fought for the cause of his master, and in a battle at Soissons in 923, Robert was slain ; but the nobles rallied under the son of Robert, Hugh le Blanc, and Herbert count of Vermandois, the latter of whom got Charles into his power and kept him prisoner, while Rodolph duke of Burgundy was set up as king of France. It was at this time that the queen of Charles, who was king Athelstan's sister fled with her son to England ; hence the boy had the name d'Outremer. After various fortunes, but nearly always kept as a prisoner, Charles died in A.D. 929. It was after the death of Rodolph of Burgundy (A.D. 936) that Louis d'Outremer came to the throne of France.

973. Anlaf, the invader of England at the instigation of Constantine king of Scotland, was one of the sons of Sithric, the former Danish king of Northumberland.[1] The Brumford of the text is Brunanburh in Northumberland. This battle was one of the most famous of the Middle Ages, and the Saxon chronicler in his record breaks forth into poetry[2] in describing it. Anlaf and Constantine were defeated and fled. The further conquests of Athelstan in battles at Hereford and in Cornwall, and his restoration of the city of Exeter are recorded, and the chapter concludes with his death and epitaph.

Death of King Athelstan.

Martin III. (A.D. 942–946) is mentioned as pope by Higden after Leo VII., to the exclusion of the three years' pontificate of Stephen VIII.[3] (A.D. 939–942).

Cap. VII. Edmund king of England.

Edmund succeeds his brother Athelstan (A.D. 941–946). His children are mentioned, and the old story is repeated of a rebellion in Northumberland. Anlaf is again brought over from Ireland, and once more defeated. Cumberland is subdued, and given into the government of Malcolm king of Scotland. In this expedition it is said that the king carried off with him the bones of Abbot Colfrid and Hilda the abbess, and removed them to Gloucester out of the troublous region of the north. Agapitus II. (A.D. 946–955) succeeded Martin III. in the papal chair. William Longsword[4] is murdered, Hig-

[1] When, after the death of Sithric, Athelstan took to himself the kingdom of Northumberland, Anlaf retired to Ireland, where some Danish princes, his near relatives, were ruling, who received him gladly. But Sithric was never king of Ireland, as stated in Higden's text (p. 436).

[2] Saxon Chron., anno 937 (938).

[3] The notice given in Platina (fol. 70 b) may account for the omission of the name of Stephen. "Stephanus . . . ita a Romanis "seditionibus vexatus est ut nil "memoria dignum ab eo geri po- "tuerit. Immo vero (ut Marti- "nus refert) in tanta seditione "mutilatus turpiter aliquandiu "vitam duxit, cum ob inhonesta "vulnera prodire in publicum eru- "besceret."

[4] William was invited by Arnulf of Flanders to a conference on the den says, through the instigation of the French king Louis d'Outremer, whom the nobles compelled to take an oath that Richard, son of William, should succeed his father in Normandy. Richard's reign lasted from A.D. 943 to 996. Higden has many stories of him, which tell some for and some against his character, but some of which are assuredly untrue, and due to Norman legend makers. Edmund recovered the five towns in the centre of England, Lincoln, Derby, Nottingham, Leicester, and Stamford,[1] which had been ceded to the Danes; and the rebellious Anlaf consents to be baptised, though the story says rather through compulsion than free will. King Edmund followed the advice of Dunstan in many reforms,[2] and enriched considerably the abbey of Glastonbury. The king was murdered at Pucklechurch in Gloucestershire, by an outlaw Leof, who had intruded himself into the royal banquet on the feast of St. Augustine, and whom the king was endeavouring to eject. The assassin stabbed him with a dagger, which he had concealed on his person.

Conquest of the five burghs.

Murder of King Edmund.

The younger brother of the murdered king, Edred by name, was called to the throne by reason of the youth of his nephews, and reigned nine years (A.D. 946–955.) Under a new king the Northumbrians once more rebel, and are reduced to submission, and the Scots in consequence submitted without a struggle. John XI. (A.D. 931–936) was pope after Agapitus, but neither the methods employed to procure his election, nor the conduct which he displayed when in power, are worthy of anything but censure.[3] The death of Louis d'Outremer is mentioned, and the succession of his son Lothaire, who reigned thirty-two years,[1] and did not, as Higden states, die without children, for Louis V., called le Fainéant, was his son. The story next turns to England, where Edred devastates Northumbria,[2] burning the abbey of Ripon. A marvel is related of the manner in which Dunstan was informed of the death of King Edred. Edred died at Frome, and was buried at Winchester. He was succeeded by Edwy, the eldest son of King Edmund. Higden says little of this reign. The attacks made by the King on the Benedictine monasteries and their occupants, in retaliation for the insults heaped by the monks on Elgiva,[3] are just mentioned, as is also Dunstan's exile.[4] The division of the kingdom between Edwy and Edgar is ascribed to the Northumbrians and Mercians. Angels were said to have uttered to Dunstan words of good omen when Edgar was made king. Not a word occurs about Elgiva, but we are told that the soul of Edwy was rescued from hell and translated to purgatory by Dunstan's prayers. On which matter of purgatory Trevisa has a longer comment than usual, for, says he, "the words beþ perilousliche isette."

Cap. IX. Edgar king of England.

King Edgar reigned sixteen years (A.D. 959–975). He recalled Dunstan from exile, and that prelate was the guiding spirit of his reign. He was translated from the abbey of Glastonbury to the bishopric of Worcester.[5]

" unquam ante se in pontificatu " fuere perniciosior et sceleratior."

[1] Higden's text says thirty-seven. Louis d'Outremer died A.D. 954, and Lothaire in 986.

[2] In the text (p. 456, line 2) Rex Edredus ought to be inserted after tandem, through the MSS. in use for this volume omit the name. A MS. to which allusion will be made at the close of the preface contains the words.

[3] The marriage with Elgiva is called "nefarius concubitus." Perhaps she was related to Edwy within the ecclesiastically prohibited degrees.

[4] He fled to Ghent, and remained there till it became safe to return to the northern kingdom of Edgar.

[5] He was soon after promoted to the see of Canterbury, but this is not here stated by Higden, though, on p. 464, his language implies it, for he there calls Dunstan archi-præsul.

Much is said of the reforms of this young king, and especially of his endeavours to amend church discipline. Thefts were severely punished. By his tax on Wales he cleared the country of wolves. An anecdote of his dealing with Kynadius, king of Scotland, is told to illustrate king Edgar's personal bravery and strength. He endeavoured to put down piracy, and brought his navy into effective condition, kept a watchful eye over the acts of judges and magistrates, but his easiness in allowing Danes to dwell among the English introduced habits of drunkenness into the land. The king, to correct the evil, introduced marked drinking vessels, so that men might drink measurably. Higden mentions the family of the king, and with some anecdotes of them the chapter closes. We can see in the conflicting narratives of Edgar's reign the traces of the feud between the regular clergy, who speak in his praise, and the stories, so inconsistent even with morality, much less with religion, which are current concerning his reign,[1] and which, it may be, the secular clergy, who were ousted to make room for monks, preserved or even invented, concerning the king who was so hard on their order.

Higden records many reforms in this reign.

I have been allowed to have in my possession, during a large part of the time occupied by the production of the present volume, a MS. of Higden belonging to Dr. Sebastian Evans. I have already alluded to it, and it merits a few words of description. It is on paper, in a running hand of the fifteenth century, and, so far as I have used it, is very carefully written. There are no illustrations, nor elaborately illuminated letters in the volume, which fact accounts perhaps for the unmutilated condition in which it remains. Commencing its prologue "Post præclaros artium scriptores," &c., the text proper begins with cap. v., "Ex senatu consulto, &c."

Another MS. of Higden.

Description of the MS.

[1] Higden records the remark of Canute, in which (p. 476) Edgar is spoken of as "libidinosus et tyrannus."

The sixth book closes " cum fidelitate jurata manus ei " dederunt." In the first sentence of the seventh book there is the passage, " declinato Stigando, &c.," which is absent from some MSS. The work of Higden closes with 1326 or 1327. The continuations, which in this MS. are most like those marked in the British Museum Catalogue, " Continuations, I. c. and II.," begin in 1326, with the words " Hoc anno regina Angliæ Isabella;" but the preceding sentence does not end with " partibus " transmarinis " as in the typical copies, but with the words " tanquam regni proditores." In 1342 the entry closes, as is usual, with " sub pœna capitis et carceris inter- " dixit." Then for the second continuation omitting the link " Hoc anno non. Jun. natus est regi Edwardo III. " Edmundus," &c., which covers in a few words the years 1343–1346, this MS. proceeds, " In festo Transla- " tionis S. Thomæ, &c., and ends in 1376 with the first notice of Wycliffe at the words " sermonibus " predicantes." This is somewhat like the Second Continuation in the British Museum Catalogue of such MSS. as Cotton Nero D. VIII., but not exactly the same; and a closer examination than I have yet been able to make, may disclose some other variations in the matter of the two parts of this continuation.

Gratiæ IX^cI. | Edwardus senior primo.

Edwardus cognomento senior regnavit post patrem viginti quatuor annis,[1] litterarum cultu patre inferior, sed gloria sæculari superior. Nam urbes novas condidit, mutilatas reparavit, fines regni latius quam pater[2] dilatavit. Porro Scottorum, Cumbrorum, Wallanorum[3] reges[4] in deditionem recepit. Estsexam, Northimbriam, Merciam[5] de manibus Dacorum extorsit; totam[6] Merciam post obitum sororis suæ Elfledæ obtinuit. CALENDARS OF STATE PAPERS, &c.

[IMPERIAL 8vo., cloth. Price 15*s.* each Volume or Part.]

As far back as the year 1800, a Committee of the House of Commons recommended that Indexes and Calendars should be made to the Public Records, and thirty-six years afterwards another Committee of the House of Commons reiterated that recommendation in more forcible words; but it was not until the incorporation of the State Paper Office with the Public Record Office that the Master of the Rolls found himself in a position to take the necessary steps for carrying out the wishes of the House of Commons.

On 7 December 1855, he stated to the Lords of the Treasury that although "the Records, State Papers, and Documents in his charge constitute the most "complete and perfect series of their kind in the civilized world," and although "they are of the greatest value in a historical and constitutional "point of view, yet they are comparatively useless to the public, from the "want of proper Calendars and Indexes."

Acting upon the recommendations of the Committees of the House of Commons above referred to, he suggested to the Lords of the Treasury that to effect the object he had in view it would be necessary for him to employ a few persons fully qualified to perform the work which he contemplated.

Their Lordships assented to the necessity of having Calendars prepared and printed, and empowered the Master of the Rolls to take such steps as might be necessary for this purpose.

The following Works have been already published under the direction of the Master of the Rolls :—

THE CHRONICLES AND MEMORIALS OF GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND DURING THE MIDDLE AGES.

[ROYAL 8vo., half-bound. Price 10*s.* each Volume or Part.]

On 25 July 1822, the House of Commons presented an address to the Crown, stating that the editions of the works of our ancient historians were inconvenient and defective; that many of their writings still remained in manuscript, and, in some cases, in a single copy only. They added, "that an "uniform and convenient edition of the whole, published under His Majesty's "royal sanction, would be an undertaking honourable to His Majesty's reign, "and conducive to the advancement of historical and constitutional know- "ledge; that the House therefore humbly besought His Majesty, that He "would be graciously pleased to give such directions as His Majesty, in His "wisdom, might think fit, for the publication of a complete edition of the "ancient historians of this realm, and assured His Majesty that whatever "expense might be necessary for this purpose would be made good."

The Master of the Rolls, being very desirous that effect should be given to the resolution of the House of Commons, submitted to Her Majesty's Treasury in 1857 a plan for the publication of the ancient chronicles and memorials of the United Kingdom, and it was adopted accordingly. In selecting these works, it was considered right, in the first instance, to give preference to those of which the manuscripts were unique, or the materials of which would help to fill up blanks in English history for which no satisfactory and authentic information hitherto existed in any accessible form. One great object the Master of the Rolls had in view was to form a corpus historicum within reasonable limits, and which should be as complete as possible. In a subject of so vast a range, it was important that the historical student should be able to select such volumes as conformed with his own peculiar tastes and studies, and not be put to the expense of purchasing the whole collection; an inconvenience inseparable from any other plan than that which has been in this instance adopted.

Of the Chronicles and Memorials, the following volumes have been published. They embrace the period from the earliest time of British history down to the end of the reign of Henry VII.

1. The Chronicle of England, by John Capgrave. Edited by the Rev. F. C. Hingeston, M.A., of Exeter College, Oxford. 1858.

Capgrave was prior of Lynn, in Norfolk, and provincial of the order of the Friars Hermits of England shortly before the year 1464. His Chronicle extends from the creation of the world to the year 1417. As a record of the language spoken in Norfolk (being written in English), it is of considerable value.

2. Chronicon Monasterii de Abingdon. Vols. I. and II. Edited by the Rev. Joseph Stevenson, M.A., of University College, Durham, and Vicar of Leighton Buzzard. 1858.

This Chronicle traces the history of the great Benedictine monastery of Abingdon in Berkshire, from its foundation by King Ina of Wessex, to the reign of Richard I., shortly after which period the present narrative was drawn up by an inmate of the establishment. The author had access to the title-deeds of the house ; and incorporates into his history various charters of the Saxon kings, of great importance as illustrating not only the history of the locality but that of the kingdom. The work is printed for the first time.

3. Lives of Edward the Confessor. I.—La Estoire de Seint Aedward le Rei. II.—Vita Beati Edvardi Regis et Confessoris. III.—Vita Æduuardi Regis qui apud Westmonasterium requiescit. Edited by Henry Richards Luard, M.A., Fellow and Assistant Tutor of Trinity College, Cambridge. 1858.

The first is a poem in Norman French, containing 4,686 lines, addressed to Alianor, Queen of Henry III., and probably written in the year 1245, on the occasion of the restoration of the church of Westminster. Nothing is known of the author. The second is an anonymous poem, containing 536 lines, written between the years 1440 and 1450, by command of Henry VI., to whom it is dedicated. It does not throw any new light on the reign of Edward the Confessor, but is valuable as a specimen of the Latin poetry of the time. The third, also by an anonymous author, was apparently written for Queen Edith, between the years 1066 and 1074, during the pressure of the suffering brought on the Saxons by the Norman conquest. It notices many facts not found in other writers, and some which differ considerably from the usual accounts.

4. Monumenta Franciscana ; scilicet, I.—Thomas de Eccleston de Adventu Fratrum Minorum in Angliam. II.—Adæ de Marisco Epistolæ. III.—Registrum Fratrum Minorum Londoniæ. Edited by J. S. Brewer, M.A., Professor of English Literature, King's College, London. 1858.

This volume contains original materials for the history of the settlement of the order of Saint Francis in England, the letters of Adam de Marisco, and other papers connected with the foundation and diffusion of this great body. It has been the aim of the editor to collect whatever historical information could be found in this country, towards illustrating a period of the national history for which only scanty materials exist. None of these have been before printed.

5. Fasciculi Zizaniorum Magistri Johannis Wyclif cum Tritico. Ascribed to Thomas Netter, of Walden, Provincial of the Carmelite Order in England, and Confessor to King Henry the Fifth. Edited by the Rev. W. W. Shirley, M.A., Tutor and late Fellow of Wadham College, Oxford. 1858.

This work derives its principal value from being the only contemporaneous account of the rise of the Lollards. When written, the disputes of the school-men had been extended to the field of theology, and they appear both in the writings of Wycliff and in those of his adversaries. Wycliff's little bundles of tares are not less metaphysical than theological, and the conflict between Nominalists and Realists rages side by side with the conflict between the different interpreters of Scripture. The work gives a good idea of the controversies at the end of the 14th and the beginning of the 15th centuries.

6. The Buik of the Croniclis of Scotland ; or, A Metrical Version of the History of Hector Boece ; by William Stewart. Vols. I., II., and III. Edited by W. B. Turnbull, Esq., of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister-at-Law. 1858.

This is a metrical translation of a Latin Prose Chronicle, and was written in the first half of the 16th century. The narrative begins with the earliest legends, and ends with the death of James I. of Scotland, and the "evil ending of the traitors that slew him." Strict accuracy of statement is not to be looked for in such a work as this ; but the stories of the colonization of Spain, Ireland, and Scotland are interesting if not true ; and the chronicle is valuable as a reflection of the manners, sentiments, and character of the age in which it was composed. The peculiarities of the Scottish dialect are well illustrated in this metrical version, and the student of language will find ample materials for comparison with the English dialects of the same period, and with modern lowland Scotch.

7. Johannis Capgrave Liber de Illustribus Henricis. Edited by the Rev. F. C. Hingeston, M.A., of Exeter College, Oxford. 1858.

This work is dedicated to Henry VI. of England, who appears to have been, in the author's estimation, the greatest of all the Henries. It is divided into three distinct parts, each having its own separate dedication. The first part relates only to the history of the Empire, and extends from the election of Henry I., the Fowler, to the end of the reign of the Emperor Henry VI. The second part is devoted to English history, and extends from the accession of Henry I. in the year 1100, to the year 1446, which was the twenty-fourth year of the reign of King Henry VI. The third part contains the lives of illustrious men who have borne the name of Henry in various parts of the world.

Capgrave was born in 1393, in the reign of Richard II., and lived during the Wars of the Roses, for the history of which period his work is of some value.

8. Historia Monasterii S. Augustini Cantuariensis, by Thomas of Elmham, formerly Monk and Treasurer of that Foundation. Edited by Charles Hardwick, M.A., Fellow of St. Catharine's Hall, and Christian Advocate in the University of Cambridge. 1858.

This history extends from the arrival of St. Augustine in Kent until 1191. Prefixed is a chronology as far as 1418, which shows in outline what was to have been the character of the work when completed. The only copy known is in the possession of Trinity Hall, Cambridge. The author was connected with Norfolk, and most probably with Elmham, whence he derived his name.

9. Eulogium (Historiarum sive Temporis) : Chronicon ab Orbe condito usque ad Annum Domini 1366 ; a Monacho quodam Malmesbiriensi exaratum. Vols. I., II., and III. Edited by F. S. Haydon, Esq., B.A. 1858–1863.

This is a Latin Chronicle extending from the Creation to the latter part of the reign of Edward III., and written by a monk of the Abbey of Malmesbury, in Wiltshire, about the year 1367. A continuation, carrying the history of England down to the year 1413, was added in the former half of the fifteenth century by an author whose name is not known. The original Chronicle is divided into five books, and contains a history of the world generally, but more especially of England to the year 1366. The continuation extends the history down to the coronation of Henry V. The Eulogium itself is chiefly valuable as containing a history, by a contemporary, of the period between 1356 and 1366. The notices of events appear to have been written very soon after their occurrence. Among other interesting matter, the Chronicle contains a diary of the Poitiers campaign, evidently furnished by some person who accompanied the army of the Black Prince. The continuation of the Chronicle is also the work of a contemporary, and gives a very interesting account of the reigns of Richard II. and Henry IV. It is believed to be the earliest authority for the statement that the latter monarch died in the Jerusalem Chamber at Westminster.

10. MEMORIALS OF HENRY THE SEVENTH: Bernardi Andreæ Tholosatis Vita Regis Henrici Septimi; necnon alia quædam ad eundem Regem spectantia. Edited by JAMES GAIRDNER, Esq. 1858.

The contents of this volume are—(1) a life of Henry VII., by his poet laureate and historiographer, Bernard André, of Toulouse, with some compositions in verse, of which he is supposed to have been the author; (2) the journals of Roger Machado during certain embassies on which he was sent by Henry VII. to Spain and Brittany, the first of which had reference to the marriage of the King's son, Arthur, with Catharine of Arragon; (3) two curious reports by envoys sent to Spain in the year 1505 touching the succession to the Crown of Castile, and a project of marriage between Henry VII. and the Queen of Naples; and (4) an account of Philip of Castile's reception in England in 1506. Other documents of interest in connexion with the period are given in an appendix.

11. MEMORIALS OF HENRY THE FIFTH. I.—Vita Henrici Quinti, Roberto Redmanno auctore. II.—Versus Rhythmici in laudem Regis Henrici Quinti. III.—Elmhami Liber Metricus de Henrico V. Edited by CHARLES A. COLE, Esq. 1858.

This volume contains three treatises which more or less illustrate the history of the reign of Henry V., viz.: A Life by Robert Redman; a Metrical Chronicle by Thomas Elmham, prior of Lenton, a contemporary author; Versus Rhythmici, written apparently by a monk of Westminster Abbey, who was also a contemporary of Henry V. These works are printed for the first time.

12. MUNIMENTA GILDHALLÆ LONDONIENSIS; Liber Albus, Liber Custumarum, et Liber Horn, in archivis Gildhallæ asservati. Vol. I. Liber Albus. Vol. II. (in Two Parts), Liber Custumarum. Vol. III., Translation of the Anglo-Norman Passages in Liber Albus, Glossaries, Appendices, and Index. Edited by HENRY THOMAS RILEY, Esq., M.A., Barrister-at-Law. 1859–1862.

The manuscript of the Liber Albus, compiled by John Carpenter, Common Clerk of the City of London in the year 1419, a large folio volume, is preserved in the Record Room of the City of London. It gives an account of the laws, regulations, and institutions of that City in the twelfth, thirteenth, fourteenth, and early part of the fifteenth centuries.

The Liber Custumarum was compiled probably by various hands in the early part of the fourteenth century during the reign of Edward II. The manuscript, a folio volume, is also preserved in the Record Room of the City of London, though some portion in its original state, borrowed from the City in the reign of Queen Elizabeth and never returned, forms part of the Cottonian MS. Claudius D. II. in the British Museum. It also gives an account of the laws, regulations, and institutions of the City of London in the twelfth, thirteenth, and early part of the fourteenth centuries.

13. CHRONICA JOHANNIS DE OXENEDES. Edited by Sir HENRY ELLIS, K.H. 1859.

Although this Chronicle tells of the arrival of Hengist and Horsa in England in the year 449, yet it substantially begins with the reign of King Alfred, and comes down to the year 1292, where it ends abruptly. The history is particularly valuable for notices of events in the eastern portions of the kingdom, which are not to be elsewhere obtained, and some curious facts are mentioned relative to the floods in that part of England, which are confirmed in the Friesland Chronicle of Anthony Heinrich, pastor of the Island of Mohr.

14. A Collection of Political Poems and Songs relating to English History, from the Accession of Edward III. to the Reign of Henry VIII. Vols. I. and II. Edited by Thomas Wright, Esq., M.A. 1859–1861.

These Poems are perhaps the most interesting of all the historical writings of the period, though they cannot be relied on for accuracy of statement. They are various in character; some are upon religious subjects, some may be called satires, and some give no more than a court scandal; but as a whole they present a very fair picture of society, and of the relations of the different classes to one another. The period comprised is in itself interesting, and brings us, through the decline of the feudal system, to the beginning of our modern history. The songs in old English are of considerable value to the philologist.

15. The "Opus Tertium," "Opus Minus," &c., of Roger Bacon. Edited by J. S. Brewer, M.A., Professor of English Literature, King's College, London. 1859.

This is the celebrated treatise—never before printed—so frequently referred to by the great philosopher in his works. It contains the fullest details we possess of the life and labours of Roger Bacon: also a fragment by the same author, supposed to be unique, the "Compendium Studii Theologiæ."

16. Bartholomæi de Cotton, Monachi Norwicensis, Historia Anglicana; 449–1298: necnon ejusdem Liber de Archiepiscopis et Episcopis Angliæ. Edited by Henry Richards Luard, M.A., Fellow and Assistant Tutor of Trinity College, Cambridge. 1859.

The author, a monk of Norwich, has here given us a Chronicle of England from the arrival of the Saxons in 449 to the year 1298, in or about which year it appears that he died. The latter portion of this history (the whole of the reign of Edward I. more especially) is of great value, as the writer was contemporary with the events which he records. An Appendix contains several illustrative documents connected with the previous narrative.

17. Brut y Tywysogion; or, The Chronicle of the Princes of Wales. Edited by the Rev. John Williams ab Ithel, M.A. 1860.

This work, also known as "The Chronicle of the Princes of Wales," has been attributed to Caradoc of Llancarvan, who flourished about the middle of the twelfth century. It is written in the ancient Welsh language, begins with the abdication and death of Caedwala at Rome, in the year 681, and continues the history down to the subjugation of Wales by Edward I., about the year 1282.

18. A Collection of Royal and Historical Letters during the Reign of Henry IV. 1399–1404. Edited by the Rev. F. C. Hingeston, M.A., of Exeter College, Oxford. 1860.

This volume, like all the others in the series containing a miscellaneous selection of letters, is valuable on account of the light it throws upon biographical history, and the familiar view it presents of characters, manners, and events. The period requires much elucidation; to which it will materially contribute.

19. The Repressor of over much Blaming of the Clergy. By Reginald Pecock, sometime Bishop of Chichester. Vols. I. and II. Edited by Churchill Babington, B.D., Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge. 1860.

The "Repressor" may be considered the earliest piece of good theological disquisition of which our English prose literature can boast. The author was born about the end of the fourteenth century, consecrated Bishop of St. Asaph in the year 1444, and translated to the see of Chichester in 1450. While Bishop of St. Asaph, he zealously defended his brother prelates from the attacks of those who censured the bishops for their neglect of duty. He maintained that it was no part of a bishop's functions to appear in the pulpit, and that his time might be more profitably spent, and his dignity better maintained, in the performance of works of a higher character. Among those who thought differently were the Lollards, and against their general doctrines the "Repressor" is directed. Pecock took up a position midway between that of the Roman Church and that of the modern Anglican Church; but his work is interesting chiefly because it gives a full account of the views of the Lollards and of the arguments by which they were supported, and because it assists us to ascertain the state of feeling which ultimately led to the Reformation. Apart from religious matters, the light thrown upon contemporaneous history is very small, but the "Repressor" has great value for the philologist, as it tells us what were the characteristics of the language in use among the cultivated Englishmen of the fifteenth century. Pecock, though an opponent of the Lollards, showed a certain spirit of toleration, for which he received, towards the end of his life, the usual mediæval reward—persecution.

20. Annales Cambriæ. Edited by the Rev. John Williams ab Ithel, M.A. 1860.

These annals, which are in Latin, commence in the year 447, and come down to the year 1288. The earlier portion appears to be taken from an Irish Chronicle, which was also used by Tigernach, and by the compiler of the Annals of Ulster. During its first century it contains scarcely anything relating to Britain, the earliest direct concurrence with English history is relative to the mission of Augustine. Its notices throughout, though brief, are valuable. The annals were probably written at St. Davids, by Blegewryd, Archdeacon of Llandaff, the most learned man in his day in all Cymru.

21. The Works of Giraldus Cambrensis. Vols. I., II., III., and IV. Edited by J. S. Brewer, M.A., Professor of English Literature, King's College, London. Vols. V. and VI. Edited by the Rev. James F. Dimock, M.A., Rector of Barnburgh, Yorkshire. 1861–1873.

These volumes contain the historical works of Gerald du Barry, who lived in the reigns of Henry II., Richard I., and John, and attempted to re-establish the independence of Wales by restoring the see of St. Davids to its ancient primacy. His works are of a very miscellaneous nature, both in prose and verse, and are remarkable chiefly for the racy and original anecdotes which they contain relating to contemporaries. He is the only Welsh writer of any importance who has contributed so much to the mediæval literature of this country, or assumed, in consequence of his nationality, so free and independent a tone. His frequent travels in Italy, in France, in Ireland, and in Wales, gave him opportunities for observation which did not generally fall to the lot of mediæval writers in the twelfth and thirteenth centuries, and of these observations Giraldus has made due use. Only extracts from these treatises have been printed before, and almost all of them are taken from unique manuscripts.

The Topographia Hibernica (in Vol. V.) is the result of Giraldus' two visits to Ireland. The first in the year 1183, the second in 1185–6, when he accompanied Prince John into that country. Curious as this treatise is, Mr. Dimock is of opinion that it ought not to be accepted as sober truthful history, for Giraldus himself states that truth was not his main object, and that he compiled the work for the purpose of sounding the praises of Henry the Second. Elsewhere, however, he declares that he had stated nothing in the Topographia of the truth of which he was not well assured, either by his own eyesight or by the testimony, with all diligence elicited, of the most trustworthy and authentic men in the country; that though he did not put just the same full faith in their reports as in what he had himself seen, yet, as they only related what they had themselves seen, he could not but believe such credible witnesses. A very interesting portion of this treatise is devoted to the animals of Ireland. It shows that he was a very accurate and acute observer, and his descriptions are given in a way that a scientific naturalist of the present day could hardly improve upon. The Expugnatio Hibernica was written about the year 1188 and may be regarded rather as a great epic than a sober relation of acts occurring in his own days. No one can peruse it without coming to the conclusion that it is rather a poetical fiction than a prosaic truthful history.

Vol. VI. contains the Itinerarium Kambriæ et Descriptio Kambriæ.

22. Letters and Papers illustrative of the Wars of the English in France during the Reign of Henry the Sixth, King of England. Vol. I., and Vol. II. (in Two Parts). Edited by the Rev. Joseph Stevenson, M.A., of University College, Durham, and Vicar of Leighton Buzzard. 1861–1864.

The letters and papers contained in these volumes are derived chiefly from originals or contemporary copies extant in the Bibliothèque Impériale, and the Depôt des Archives, in Paris. They illustrate the line of policy adopted by John Duke of Bedford and his successors during their government of Normandy, and such other provinces of France as had been acquired by Henry V. We may here trace, step by step, the gradual declension of the English power, until we are prepared to read of its final overthrow.

23. The Anglo-Saxon Chronicle, according to the several Original Authorities. Vol. I., Original Texts. Vol. II., Translation. Edited and translated by Benjamin Thorpe, Esq., Member of the Royal Academy of Sciences at Munich, and of the Society of Netherlandish Literature at Leyden. 1861.

This Chronicle, extending from the earliest history of Britain to the year 1154, is justly the boast of England; for no other nation can produce any history, written in its own vernacular, at all approaching it, either in antiquity, truthfulness, or extent, the historical books of the Bible alone excepted. There are at present six independent manuscripts of the Saxon Chronicle, ending in different years, and written in different parts of the country. In this edition, the text of each manuscript is printed in columns on the same page, so that the student may see at a glance the various changes which occur in orthography, whether arising from locality or age.

24. Letters and Papers illustrative of the Reigns of Richard III. and Henry VII. Vols. I. and II. Edited by James Gairdner, Esq. 1861–1863.

The Papers are derived from MSS. in the Public Record Office, the British Museum, and other repositories. The period to which they refer is unusually destitute of chronicles and other sources of historical information, so that the light obtained from these documents is of special importance. The principal contents of the volumes are some diplomatic Papers of Richard III.; correspondence between Henry VII. and Ferdinand and Isabella of Spain; documents relating to Edmund de la Pole, Earl of Suffolk; and a portion of the correspondence of James IV. of Scotland.

25. Letters of Bishop Grosseteste, illustrative of the Social Condition of his Time. Edited by Henry Richards Luard, M.A., Fellow and Assistant Tutor of Trinity College, Cambridge. 1861.

The Letters of Robert Grosseteste (131 in number) are here collected from various sources, and a large portion of them is printed for the first time. They range in date from about 1210 to 1253, and relate to various matters connected not only with the political history of England during the reign of Henry III., but with its ecclesiastical condition. They refer especially to the diocese of Lincoln, of which Grosseteste was bishop.

26. Descriptive Catalogue of Manuscripts relating to the History of Great Britain and Ireland. Vol. I. (in Two Parts); Anterior to the Norman Invasion. Vol. II.; 1066–1200. Vol. III.; 1200–1327. By Sir Thomas Duffus Hardy, D.C.L., Deputy Keeper of the Public Records. 1862–1871.

The object of this work is to publish notices of all known sources of British history, both printed and unprinted, in one continued sequence. The materials, when historical (as distinguished from biographical), are arranged under the year in which the latest event is recorded in the chronicle or history, and not under the period in which its author, real or supposed, flourished. Biographies are enumerated under the year in which the person commemorated died, and not under the year in which the life was written. This arrangement has two advantages; the materials for any given period may be seen at a glance; and if the reader knows the time when an author wrote, and the number of years that had elapsed between the date of the events and the time the writer flourished, he will generally be enabled to form a fair estimate of the comparative value of the narrative itself. A brief analysis of each work has been added when deserving it, in which the original portions are distinguished from those which are mere compilations. When possible, the sources are indicated from which such compilations have been derived. A biographical sketch of the author of each piece has been added, and a brief notice has also been given of such British authors as have written on historical subjects.

27. Royal and other Historical Letters illustrative of the Reign of Henry III. Vol. I., 1216–1235. Vol. II., 1236–1272. Selected and edited by the Rev. W. W. Shirley, D.D., Regius Professor in Ecclesiastical History, and Canon of Christ Church, Oxford. 1862–1866.

The letters contained in these volumes are derived chiefly from the ancient correspondence formerly in the Tower of London, and now in the Public Record Office. They illustrate the political history of England during the growth of its liberties, and throw considerable light upon the personal history of Simon de Montfort. The affairs of France form the subject of many of them, especially in regard to the province of Gascony. The entire collection consists of nearly 700 documents, the greater portion of which is printed for the first time.

28. Chronica Monasterii S. Albani.—1. Thomæ Walsingham Historia Anglicana; Vol. I., 1272–1381: Vol. II., 1381–1422. 2. Willelmi Rishanger Chronica et Annales, 1259–1307. 3. Albani, conscriptum. Edited by Henry Thomas Riley, Esq., M.A., Cambridge and Oxford; and of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law. 1863–1876.

In the first two volumes is a History of England, from the death of Henry III. to the death of Henry V., by Thomas Walsingham, Precentor of St. Albans, from MS. VII. in the Arundel Collection in the College of Arms, London, a manuscript of the fifteenth century, collated with MS. 13 E. IX. in the King's Library in the British Museum, and MS. VII. in the Parker Collection of Manuscripts at Corpus Christi College, Cambridge.

In the third volume is a Chronicle of English History, attributed to William Rishanger, who lived in the reign of Edward I., from the Cotton. MS. Faustina B. IX. in the British Museum, collated with MS. 14 C. VII. (fols. 219–231) in the King's Library, British Museum, and the Cotton MS. Claudius E. III., fols. 306–331: an account of transactions attending the award of the kingdom of Scotland to John Balliol, 1291–1292, from MS. Cotton. Claudius D. VI., also attributed to William Rishanger, but on no sufficient ground: a short Chronicle of English History, 1292 to 1300, by an unknown hand, from MS. Cotton. Claudius D. VI. : a short Chronicle, Willelmi Rishanger Gesta Edwardi Primi, Regis Angliæ, from MS. 14 C. I. in the Royal Library, and MS. Cotton. Claudius D. VI., with Annales Regum Angliæ, probably by the same hand: and fragments of three Chronicles of English History, 1285 to 1307.

In the fourth volume is a Chronicle of English History, 1259 to 1296, from MS. Cotton. Claudius D. VI. : Annals of Edward II., 1307 to 1323, by John de Trokelowe, a monk of St. Albans, and a continuation of Trokelowe's Annals, 1323, 1324, by Henry de Blaneforde, both from MS. Cotton. Claudius D. VI. : a full Chronicle of English History, 1392 to 1406, from MS. VII. in the Library of Corpus Christi College, Cambridge; and an account of the Benefactors of St. Albans, written in the early part of the fifteenth century, from MS. VI. in the same Library.

The fifth, sixth, and seventh volumes contain a history of the Abbots of St. Albans, 793 to 1411, mainly compiled by Thomas Walsingham, from MS. Cotton. Claudius E. IV., in the British Museum : with a Continuation, from the closing pages of Parker MS. VII., in the Library of Corpus Christi College, Cambridge.

The eighth and ninth volumes, in continuation of the Annals, contain a Chronicle, probably by John Amundesham, a monk of St. Albans.

The tenth and eleventh volumes relate especially to the acts and proceedings of Abbots Whethamstede, Albon, and Wallingford, and may be considered as a memorial of the chief historical and domestic events during those periods.

The twelfth volume contains a compendious History of England to the reign of Henry V., and of Normandy in early times, also by Thomas Walsingham, and dedicated to Henry V. The compiler has often substituted other authorities in place of those consulted in the preparation of his larger work.

29. Chronicon Abbatiæ Eveshamensis, Auctoribus Dominico Priore Eveshamiæ et Thoma de Marleberge Abbate, a Fundatione ad Annum 1213, una cum Continuatione ad Annum 1418. Edited by the Rev. W. D. Macray, M.A., Bodleian Library, Oxford. 1863.

The Chronicle of Evesham illustrates the history of that important monastery from its foundation by Egwin, about 690, to the year 1418. Its chief feature is an autobiography, which makes us acquainted with the inner daily life of a great abbey, such as but rarely has been recorded. Interspersed are many notices of general, personal, and local history which will be read with much interest. This work exists in a single MS., and is for the first time printed.

30. Ricardi de Cirencestria Speculum Historiale de Gestis Regum Angliæ. Vol. I., 447–871. Vol. II., 872–1066. Edited by John E. B. Mayor, M.A., Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge. 1863–1869.

The compiler, Richard of Cirencester, was a monk of Westminster, 1355–1400. In 1391 he obtained a licence to make a pilgrimage to Rome. His history, in four books, extends from 447 to 1066. He announces his intention of continuing it, but there is no evidence that he completed any more. This chronicle gives many charters in favour of Westminster Abbey, and a very full account of the lives and miracles of the saints, especially of Edward the Confessor, whose reign occupies the fourth book. A treatise on the Coronation, by William of Sudbury, a monk of Westminster, fills book iii. c. 3. It was on this author that C. J. Bertram fathered his forgery, De Situ Brittaniæ, in 1747.

31. Year Books of the Reign of Edward the First. Years 20–21, 21–22, 30–31, and 32–33. Edited and translated by Alfred John Horwood, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law. 1863–1873.

The volumes known as the "Year Books" contain reports in Norman-French of cases argued and decided in the Courts of Common Law. They may be considered to a great extent as the "lex non scripta" of England, and have been held in the highest veneration by the ancient sages of the law, and were received by them as the repositories of the first recorded judgments and dicta of the great legal luminaries of past ages. They are also worthy of the attention of the general reader on account of the historical information and the notices of public and private persons which they contain, as well as the light which they throw on ancient manners and customs.

32. Narratives of the Expulsion of the English from Normandy, 1449–1450.—Robertus Blondelli de Reductione Normanniæ: Le Recouvrement de Normendie, par Berry, Hérault du Roy: Conferences between the Ambassadors of France and England. Edited, from MSS. in the Imperial Library at Paris, by the Rev. Joseph Stevenson, M.A., of University College, Durham. 1863.

This volume contains the narrative of an eye-witness who details with considerable power and minuteness the circumstances which attended the final expulsion of the English from Normandy in the year 1450. The history commences with the infringement of the truce by the capture of Fougères, and ends with the battle of Formigny and the embarkation of the Duke of Somerset. The whole period embraced is less than two years.

33. Historia et Cartularium Monasterii S. Petri Gloucestriæ. Vols. I., II., and III. Edited by W. H. Hart, Esq., F.S.A., Membre correspondant de la Société des Antiquaires de Normandie. 1863–1867.

This work consists of two parts, the History and the Cartulary of the Monastery of St. Peter, Gloucester. The history furnishes an account of the monastery from its foundation, in the year 681, to the early part of the reign of Richard II., together with a calendar of donations and benefactions. It treats principally of the affairs of the monastery, but occasionally matters of general history are introduced. Its authorship has generally been assigned to Walter Froucester, the twentieth abbot, but without any foundation.

34. Alexandri Neckam de Naturis Rerum libri duo; with Neckam's Poem, De Laudibus Divinæ Sapientiæ. Edited by Thomas Wright, Esq., M.A. 1863.

Neckam was a man who devoted himself to science, such as it was in the twelfth century. In the "De Naturis Rerum" are to be found what may be called the rudiments of many sciences mixed up with much error and ignorance. Neckam was not thought infallible, even by his contemporaries, for Roger Bacon remarks of him, "this Alexander in many things wrote what was true and useful; "but he neither can nor ought by just title to be reckoned among authorities." Neckam, however, had sufficient independence of thought to differ from some of the schoolmen who in his time considered themselves the only judges of literature. He had his own views in morals, and in giving us a glimpse of them, as well as of his other opinions, he throws much light upon the manners, customs, and general tone of thought prevalent in the twelfth century. The poem entitled "De Laudibus Divinæ Sapientiæ" appears to be a metrical paraphrase or abridgment of the "De Naturis Rerum." It is written in the elegiac metre; and though there are many lines which violate classical rules, it is, as a whole, above the ordinary standard of mediæval Latin.

35. Leechdoms, Wortcunning, and Starcraft of Early England; being a Collection of Documents illustrating the History of Science in this Country before the Norman Conquest. Vols. I., II., and III. Collected and edited by the Rev. T. Oswald Cockayne, M.A., of St. John's College, Cambridge. 1864–1866.

This work illustrates not only the history of science, but the history of superstition. In addition to the information bearing directly upon the medical skill and medical faith of the times, there are many passages which incidentally throw light upon the general mode of life and ordinary diet. The volumes are interesting not only in their scientific, but also in their social aspect. The manuscripts from which they have been printed are valuable to the Anglo-Saxon scholar for the illustrations they afford of Anglo-Saxon orthography.

36. Annales Monastici. Vol. I. :—Annales de Margan, 1066–1232 ; Annales de Theokesberia, 1066–1263 ; Annales de Burton, 1004–1263. Vol. II. :—Annales Monasterii de Wintonia, 519–1277 ; Annales Monasterii de Waverleia, 1–1291. Vol. III. :—Annales Prioratus de Dunstaplia, 1–1297 ; Annales Monasterii de Bermundeseia, 1042–1432. Vol. IV. :—Annales Monasterii de Oseneia, 1016–1347 ; Chronicon vulgo dictum Chronicon Thomæ Wykes, 1066–1289 ; Annales Prioratus de Wigornia, 1–1377. Vol. V. :—Index and Glossary. Edited by Henry Richards Luard, M.A., Fellow and Assistant Tutor of Trinity College, and Registrary of the University, Cambridge. 1864–1869.

The present collection of Monastic Annals embraces all the more important chronicles compiled in religious houses in England during the thirteenth century. These distinct works are ten in number. The extreme period which they embrace ranges from the year 1 to 1432, although they refer more especially to the reigns of John, Henry III., and Edward I. Some of these narratives have already appeared in print, but others are printed for the first time.

37. Magna Vita S. Hugonis Episcopi Lincolniensis. From Manuscripts in the Bodleian Library, Oxford, and the Imperial Library, Paris. Edited by the Rev. James F. Dimock, M.A., Rector of Barnburgh, Yorkshire. 1864.

This work contains a number of very curious and interesting incidents, and being the work of a contemporary, is very valuable, not only as a truthful biography of a celebrated ecclesiastic, but as the work of a man, who, from personal knowledge, gives notices of passing events, as well as of individuals who were then taking active part in public affairs. The author, in all probability, was Adam Abbot of Evesham. He was domestic chaplain and private confessor of Bishop Hugh, and in these capacities was admitted to the closest intimacy. Bishop Hugh was Prior of Witham for 11 years before he became Bishop of Lincoln. His consecration took place on the 21st September 1186 ; he died on the 16th of November 1200 ; and was canonized in 1220.

38. Chronicles and Memorials of the Reign of Richard the First. Vol. I. :—Itinerarium Peregrinorum et Gesta Regis Ricardi. Vol. II. :—Epistolæ Cantuarienses ; the Letters of the Prior and Convent of Christ Church, Canterbury ; 1187 to 1199. Edited by William Stubbs, M.A., Vicar of Navestock, Essex, and Lambeth Librarian. 1864–1865.

The authorship of the Chronicle in Vol. I., hitherto ascribed to Geoffrey Vinesauf, is now more correctly ascribed to Richard, Canon of the Holy Trinity of London. The narrative extends from 1187 to 1199 ; but its chief interest consists in the minute and authentic narrative which it furnishes of the exploits of Richard I., from his departure from England in December 1189 to his death in 1199. The author states in his prologue that he was an eye-witness of much that he records ; and various incidental circumstances which occur in the course of the narrative confirm this assertion.

The letters in Vol. II., written between 1187 and 1199, are of value as furnishing authentic materials for the history of the ecclesiastical condition of England during the reign of Richard I. They had their origin in a dispute which arose from the attempts of Baldwin and Hubert, archbishops of Canterbury, to found a college of secular canons, a project which gave great umbrage to the monks of Canterbury, who saw in it a design to supplant them in their function of metropolitan chapter. These letters are printed, for the first time, from a MS. belonging to the archiepiscopal library at Lambeth.

39. Recueil des Croniques et anchiennes Istories de la Grant Bretaigne a present nomme Engleterre, par Jehan de Waurin. Vol. I.

Albina to 688. Vol. II., 1399–1422 Edited by WILLIAM HARDY, Esq. F.S.A. 1864–1868.

40. A COLLECTION OF THE CHRONICLES AND ANCIENT HISTORIES OF GREAT BRITAIN, NOW CALLED ENGLAND, by JOHN DE WAVRIN. Albina to 688. (Translation of the preceding Vol. I.) Edited and translated by WILLIAM HARDY, Esq., F.S.A. 1864.

This curious chronicle extends from the fabulous period of history down to the return of Edward IV. to England in the year 1471, after the second deposition of Henry VI. The manuscript from which the text of the work is taken is preserved in the Imperial Library at Paris, and is believed to be the only complete and nearly contemporary copy in existence. The work, as originally bound, was comprised in six volumes, since rebound in morocco in 12 volumes, folio maximo, vellum, and is illustrated with exquisite miniatures, vignettes, and initial letters. It was written towards the end of the fifteenth century, having been expressly executed for Louis de Bruges, Seigneur de la Gruthuyse and Earl of Winchester, from whose cabinet it passed into the library of Louis XII. at Blois.

41. POLYCHRONICON RANULPHI HIGDEN, with Trevisa's Translation. Vols. I. and II. Edited by CHURCHILL BABINGTON, B.D., Senior Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge. Vols. III., IV., V., and VI. Edited by the Rev. JOSEPH RAWSON LUMBY, B.D., Vicar of St. Edward's, Cambridge, Fellow of St. Catharine's College, and late Fellow of Magdalene College, Cambridge. 1865–1876.

This is one of the many mediæval chronicles which assume the character of a history of the world. It begins with the creation, and is brought down to the author's own time, the reign of Edward III. Prefixed to the historical portion, is a chapter devoted to geography, in which is given a description of every known land. To say that the Polychronicon was written in the fourteenth century is to say that it is not free from inaccuracies. It has, however, a value apart from its intrinsic merits. It enables us to form a very fair estimate of the knowledge of history and geography which well-informed readers of the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries possessed, for it was then the standard work on general history.

The two English translations, which are printed with the original Latin, afford interesting illustrations of the gradual change of our language, for one was made in the fourteenth century, the other in the fifteenth. The differences between Trevisa's version and that of the unknown writer are often considerable.

42. LE LIVERE DE REIS DE BRITTANIE E LE LIVERE DE REIS DE ENGLETERE. Edited by JOHN GLOVER, M.A., Vicar of Brading, Isle of Wight, formerly Librarian of Trinity College, Cambridge. 1865.

These two treatises, though they cannot rank as independent narratives, are nevertheless valuable as careful abstracts of previous historians, especially "Le Livere de Reis de Engletere." Some various readings are given which are interesting to the philologist as instances of semi-Saxonized French.

It is supposed that Peter of Ickham must have been the author, but no certain conclusion on that point has been arrived at.

43. CHRONICA MONASTERII DE MELSA, AB ANNO 1150 USQUE AD ANNUM 1406. Vols. I., II., and III. Edited by EDWARD AUGUSTUS BOND, Esq., Assistant Keeper of the Manuscripts, and Egerton Librarian, British Museum. 1866–1868.

The Abbey of Meaux was a Cistercian house, and the work of its abbot is both curious and valuable. It is a faithful and often minute record of the establishment of a religious community, of its progress in forming an ample revenue, of its struggles to maintain its acquisitions, and of its relations to the governing institutions of the country. In addition to the private affairs of the monastery, some light is thrown upon the public events of the time, which are however kept distinct, and appear at he end of the history of each abbot's administration. The text has been printed from what is said to be the autograph of the original compiler, Thomas de Burton, the nineteenth abbot.

44. Matthæi Parisiensis Historia Anglorum, sive, ut vulgo dicitur, Historia Minor. Vols. I., II., and III. 1067–1253. Edited by Sir Frederic Madden, K.H., Keeper of the Department of Manuscripts, British Museum. 1866–1869.

The exact date at which this work was written is, according to the chronicler, 1250. The history is of considerable value as an illustration of the period during which the author lived, and contains a good summary of the events which followed the Conquest. This minor chronicle is, however, based on another work (also written by Matthew Paris) giving fuller details, which has been called the "Historia Major." The chronicle here published, nevertheless, gives some information not to be found in the greater history.

45. Liber Monasterii de Hyda: a Chronicle and Chartulary of Hyde Abbey, Winchester, 455–1023. Edited, from a Manuscript in the Library of the Earl of Macclesfield, by Edward Edwards, Esq. 1866.

The "Book of Hyde" is a compilation from much earlier sources which are usually indicated with considerable care and precision. In many cases, however, the Hyde chronicler appears to correct, to qualify, or to amplify—either from tradition or from sources of information not now discoverable—the statements, which, in substance, he adopts. He also mentions, and frequently quotes from writers whose works are either entirely lost or at present known only by fragments. There is to be found, in the "Book of Hyde," much information relating to the reign of King Alfred which is not known to exist elsewhere. The volume contains some curious specimens of Anglo-Saxon and Mediæval English.

46. Chronicon Scotorum: a Chronicle of Irish Affairs, from the Earliest Times to 1135; with a Supplement, containing the Events from 1141 to 1150. Edited, with a Translation, by William Maunsell Hennessy, Esq., M.R.I.A. 1866.

There is, in this volume, a legendary account of the peopling of Ireland and of the adventures which befell the various heroes who are said to have been connected with Irish history. The details are, however, very meagre both for this period and for the time when history becomes more authentic. The plan adopted in the chronicle gives the appearance of an accuracy to which the earlier portions of the work cannot have any claim. The succession of events is marked, year by year, from A.M. 1599 to A.D. 1150. The principal events narrated in the later portion of the work are, the invasions of foreigners, and the wars of the Irish among themselves. The text has been printed from a MS. preserved in the library of Trinity College, Dublin, written partly in Latin, partly in Irish.

47. The Chronicle of Pierre de Langtoft, in French Verse, from the earliest Period to the Death of Edward I. Vols. I. and II. Edited by Thomas Wright, Esq., M.A. 1866–1868.

It is probable that Pierre de Langtoft was a canon of Bridlington, in Yorkshire, and that he lived in the reign of Edward I., and during a portion of the reign of Edward II. This chronicle is divided into three parts; in the first is an abridgment of Geoffrey of Monmouth's "Historia Britonum," in the second, a history of the Anglo-Saxon and Norman kings, down to the death of Henry III., and in the third a history of the reign of Edward I. The principal object of the work was apparently to show the justice of Edward's Scottish wars. The language is singularly corrupt, and a curious specimen of the French of Yorkshire.

48. The War of the Gaedhil with the Gaill, or, The Invasions of Ireland by the Danes and other Norsemen. Edited, with a Translation, by James Henthorn Todd D.D., Senior Fellow of Trinity College, and Regius Professor of Hebrew in the University, Dublin. 1867.

The work in its present form, in the editor's opinion, is a comparatively modern version of an undoubtedly ancient original. That it was compiled from contemporary materials has been proved by curious incidental evidence. It is stated in the account given of the battle of Clontarf that the full tide in Dublin Bay on the day of the battle (23 April 1014) coincided with sunrise; and that the returning tide in the evening aided considerably in the defeat of the Danes. The fact has been verified by astronomical calculations, and the inference is that the author of the chronicle, if not himself an eye-witness, must have derived his information from those who were eye-witnesses. The contents of the work are sufficiently described in its title. The story is told after the manner of the Scandinavian Sagas, with poems and fragments of poems introduced into the prose narrative.

49. Gesta Regis Henrici Secundi Benedicti Abbatis. The Chronicle of the Reigns of Henry II. and Richard I., 1169–1192; known under the name of Benedict of Peterborough. Vols. I. and II. Edited by William Stubbs, M.A., Regius Professor of Modern History, Oxford, and Lambeth Librarian. 1867.

This chronicle of the reigns of Henry II. and Richard I., known commonly under the name of Benedict of Peterborough, is one of the best existing specimens of a class of historical compositions of the first importance to the student.

50. Munimenta Academica, or, Documents illustrative of Academical Life and Studies at Oxford (in Two Parts). Edited by the Rev. Henry Anstey, M.A., Vicar of St. Wendron, Cornwall, and lately Vice-Principal of St. Mary Hall, Oxford. 1868.

This work will supply materials for a History of Academical Life and Studies in the University of Oxford during the 13th, 14th, and 15th centuries.

51. Chronica Magistri Rogeri de Houedene. Vols. I., II., III., and IV. Edited by William Stubbs, M.A., Regius Professor of Modern History, and Fellow of Oriel College, Oxford. 1868–1871.

This work has long been justly celebrated, but not thoroughly understood until Mr. Stubbs' edition. The earlier portion, extending from 732 to 1148, appears to be a copy of a compilation made in Northumbria about 1161, to which Hoveden added little. From 1148 to 1169—a very valuable portion of this work—the matter is derived from another source, to which Hoveden appears to have supplied little, and not always judiciously. From 1170 to 1192 is the portion which corresponds with the Chronicle known under the name of Benedict of Peterborough (see No. 49); but it is not a copy, being sometimes an abridgment, at others a paraphrase; occasionally the two works entirely agree; showing that both writers had access to the same materials, but dealt with them differently. From 1192 to 1201 may be said to be wholly Hoveden's work: it is extremely valuable, and an authority of the first importance.

52. Willelmi Malmesbiriensis Monachi de Gestis Pontificum Anglorum Libri Quinque. Edited, from William of Malmesbury's Autograph MS., by N. E. S. A. Hamilton, Esq., of the Department of Manuscripts, British Museum. 1870.

William of Malmesbury's "Gesta Pontificum" is the principal foundation of English Ecclesiastical Biography, down to the year 1122. The manuscript which has been followed in this Edition is supposed by Mr. Hamilton to be the author's autograph, containing his latest additions and amendments.

53. Historic and Municipal Documents of Ireland, from the Archives of the City of Dublin, &c. 1172–1320. Edited by John T. Gilbert, Esq., F.S.A., Secretary of the Public Record Office of Ireland. 1870.

A collection of original documents, elucidating mainly the history and condition of the municipal, middle, and trading classes under or in relation with the rule of England in Ireland,—a subject hitherto in almost total obscurity. Extending over the first hundred and fifty years of the Anglo-Norman settlement, the series includes charters, municipal laws and regulations, rolls of names of citizens and members of merchant-guilds, lists of commodities with their rates, correspondence, illustrations of relations between ecclesiastics and laity; together with many documents exhibiting the state of Ireland during the presence there of the Scots under Robert and Edward Bruce.

54. The Annals of Loch Cé. A Chronicle of Irish Affairs, from 1014 to 1590. Vols. I. and II. Edited, with a Translation, by William Maunsell Hennessy, Esq., M.R.I.A. 1871.

The original of this chronicle has passed under various names. The title of "Annals of Loch Cé" was given to it by Professor O'Curry, on the ground that it was transcribed for Brian Mac Dermot, an Irish chieftain, who resided on an island in Loch Cé, in the county of Roscommon. It adds much to the materials for the civil and ecclesiastical history of Ireland; and contains many curious references to English and foreign affairs, not noticed in any other chronicle.

55. Monumenta Juridica. The Black Book of the Admiralty, with Appendices. Vols. I., II., III., and IV. Edited by Sir Travers Twiss, Q.C., D.C.L. 1871–1876.

This book contains the ancient ordinances and laws relating to the navy, and was probably compiled for the use of the Lord High Admiral of England. Selden calls it the "jewel of the Admiralty Records." Prynne ascribes to the Black Book the same authority in the Admiralty as the Black and Red Books have in the Court of Exchequer, and most English writers on maritime law recognize its importance.

56. Memorials of the Reign of Henry VI.:—Official Correspondence of Thomas Bekynton, Secretary to Henry VI., and Bishop of Bath and Wells. Edited, from a MS. in the Archiepiscopal Library at Lambeth, with an Appendix of Illustrative Documents, by the Rev. George Williams, B.D., Vicar of Ringwood, late Fellow of King's College, Cambridge. Vols. I. and II. 1872.

These curious volumes are of a very miscellaneous character, and were probably compiled under the immediate direction of Bekynton before he had attained to the Episcopate. They contain many of the Bishop's own letters, and several written by him in the King's name; as well as letters sent to himself while he was the Royal Secretary, and others addressed to the King. This work elucidates some obscure points in the history of the nation during the first half of the fifteenth century.

57. Matthæi Parisiensis, Monachi Sancti Albani, Chronica Majora. Vol. I. The Creation to A.D. 1066. Vol. II. A.D. 1067 to A.D. 1216. Edited by Henry Richards Luard, M.A., Fellow of Trinity College, Registrary of the University, and Vicar of Great St. Mary's, Cambridge. 1872–1874.

This work contains the "Chronica Majora" of Matthew Paris, one of the most valuable and frequently consulted of the ancient English Chronicles. It is published from its commencement, for the first time. The editions by Archbishop Parker, and William Wats, severally begin at the Norman Conquest.

58. Memoriale Fratris Walteri de Coventria.—The Historical Collections of Walter of Coventry. Vols. I. and II. Edited, from the MS. in the Library of Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, by William Stubbs, M.A., Regius Professor of Modern History, and Fellow of Oriel College, Oxford. 1872–1873.

This work, now printed in full for the first time, has long been a desideratum by Historical Scholars. The first portion, however, is not of much importance, being only a compilation from earlier writers. The part relating to the first quarter of the thirteenth century is the most valuable and interesting.

59. The Anglo-Latin Satirical Poets and Epigrammatists of the Twelfth Century. Vols. I. and II. Now first collected and edited by Thomas Wright, Esq., M.A., Corresponding Member of the National Institute of France (Académie des Inscriptions et Belles-Lettres). 1872.

The Poems contained in these volumes have long been known and appreciated as the best satires of the age in which their authors flourished, and were deservedly popular during the 13th and 14th centuries.

60. Materials for a History of the Reign of Henry VII., from original Documents preserved in the Public Record Office.

Vol. I. Edited by the Rev. WILLIAM CAMPBELL, M.A., one of Her Majesty's Inspectors of Schools. 1873.

This volume is valuable as illustrating the acts and proceedings of Henry VII. on ascending the throne, and shadows out the policy he afterwards adopted.

61. HISTORICAL PAPERS AND LETTERS FROM THE NORTHERN REGISTERS. Edited by JAMES RAINE, M.A., Canon of York, and Secretary of the Surtees Society. 1873.

The documents in this volume illustrate, for the most part, the general history of the north of England, particularly in its relation to Scotland.

62. REGISTRUM PALATINUM DUNELMENSE. THE REGISTER OF RICHARD DE KELLAWE, LORD PALATINE AND BISHOP OF DURHAM; 1311–1316. Vols. I., II., and III. Edited by Sir THOMAS DUFFUS HARDY, D.C.L., Deputy Keeper of the Public Records. 1873–1875.

WORKS PUBLISHED IN PHOTOZINCOGRAPHY.

DOMESDAY BOOK, or the GREAT SURVEY OF ENGLAND OF WILLIAM THE CONQUEROR, 1086; fac-simile of the Part relating to each county, separately (with a few exceptions of double counties). Photozincographed, by Her Majesty's Command, at the Ordnance Survey Office, Southampton, Colonel SIR HENRY JAMES, R.E., F.R.S., &c., Director. 35 Parts, imperial quarto and demy quarto (1861–1863) boards. Price 4*s.* 6*d.* to 1*l.* 1*s.* each Part, according to size; or, bound in 2 Vols., 18*l.*

This important and unique survey of the greater portion of England* is the oldest and most valuable record in the national archives. It was commenced about the year 1084 and finished in 1086. Its compilation was determined upon at Gloucester by William the Conqueror, in council, in order that he might know what was due to him, in the way of tax, from his subjects, and that each at the same time might know what he had to pay. It was compiled as much for their protection as for the benefit of the sovereign. The nobility and people had been grievously distressed at the time by the king bringing over large numbers of French and Bretons, and quartering them on his subjects, "each according to the measure of his land," for the purpose of resisting the invasion of Cnut, King of Denmark, which was apprehended. The commissioners appointed to make the survey were to inquire the name of each place; who held it in the time of King Edward the Confessor; the present possessor; how many hides were in the manor; how many ploughs were in demesne; how many homagers; how many villeins; how many cottars; how many serving men; how many free tenants; how many tenants in soccage; how much wood, meadow, and pasture; the number of mills and fish-ponds; what had been added or taken away from the place; what was the gross value in the time of Edward the Confessor; the present value; and how much each free-man or soc-man had, and whether any advance could be made in the value. Thus could be ascertained who held the estate in the time of King Edward; who then held it; its value in the time of the late king; and its value as it stood at the formation of the survey. So minute was the survey, that the writer of the contemporary portion of the Saxon Chronicle records, with some asperity—"So very narrowly he caused it to be traced out, that there was not a single hide, nor one virgate of land, nor even, it is shame to tell, though it seemed to him no shame to do, an ox, nor a cow, nor a swine was left, that was not set down."

Domesday Survey is in two parts or volumes. The first, in folio, contains the counties of Bedford, Berks, Bucks, Cambridge, Chester and Lancaster, Cornwall, Derby, Devon, Dorset, Gloucester, Hants, Hereford, Herts, Huntingdon, Kent, Leicester and Rutland, Lincoln, Middlesex, Northampton, Nottingham, Oxford, Salop, Somerset, Stafford, Surrey, Sussex, Warwick, Wilts, Worcester, and York. The second volume, in quarto, contains the counties of Essex, Norfolk, and Suffolk.

Domesday Book was printed verbatim et literatim during the last century, in consequence of an address of the House of Lords to King George III. in 1767. It was not, however, commenced until 1773, and was completed early in 1783. In 1860, Her Majesty's Government, with the concurrence of the Master of the Rolls, determined to apply the art of photozincography to the production of a fac-simile of Domesday Book, under the superintendence of Colonel Sir Henry James, R.E., Director of the Ordnance Survey, Southampton. The fac-simile was completed in 1863.

*For some reason left unexplained, many parts were left unsurveyed; Northumberland, Cumberland, Westmoreland, and Durham, are not described in the survey; nor does Lancashire appear under its proper name; but Furness, and the northern part of Lancashire, as well as the south of Westmoreland, with a part of Cumberland, are included within the West Riding of Yorkshire. That part of Lancashire which lies between the Ribble and Mersey, and which at the time of the survey comprehended 688 manors, is joined to Cheshire. Part of Rutland is described in the counties of Northampton and Lincoln.

FAC-SIMILES of NATIONAL MANUSCRIPTS, from WILLIAM THE CONQUEROR to QUEEN ANNE, selected under the direction of the Master of the Rolls, and Photozincographed, by Command of Her Majesty, by Colonel SIR HENRY JAMES, R.E., Director of the Ordnance Survey. Price, each Part, with translations and notes, double foolscap folio, 16*s*.

Part I. (William the Conqueror to Henry VII.). 1865.
Part II. (Henry VIII. and Edward VI.). 1866.
Part III. (Mary and Elizabeth). 1867.
Part IV. (James I. to Anne). 1868.

The first Part extends from William the Conqueror to Henry VII., and contains autographs of the kings of England, as well as of many other illustrious personages famous in history, and some interesting charters, letters patent, and state papers. The second Part, for the reigns of Henry VIII. and Edward VI., consists principally of holograph letters and autographs of kings, princes, statesmen, and other persons of great historical interest, who lived during those reigns. The third Part contains similar documents for the reigns of Mary and Elizabeth, including a signed bill of Lady Jane Grey. The fourth Part concludes the series, and comprises a number of documents taken from the originals belonging to the Constable of the Tower of London; also several records illustrative of the Gunpowder Plot, and a woodcut containing portraits of Mary Queen of Scots and James VI., circulated by their adherents in England, 1580-3.
